SEX DEVICES

Once the exclusive province of prostitutes and special people, the use of erotic devices to heighten passion and achieve monumental orgasms is now commonplace in the swinging society. Here is a complete run down on these devices including vibrators, dildos, extenders and many, many more, complete with photographs and details of their use and effect. How safe are they? How they are used by prostitutes and by the unscrupulous to make sex slaves of women in a compulsive, convulsive world of unendurable sex pleasure indefinitely prolonged.

SEX FOR MONEY

The hard core porno world of sex for profits from making stag films to inner workings of prostitution shown with absolute, unremitting clarity. The girls, the promoters and the users of special services reveal details of every erotic trick in the game.

SPECIAL SEXUALITY

A trip into the special world of sado-masochists, homosexuals, lesbians, exhibitionists and auto erotic sexuality to show how each achieve their particular erotic thrills. Everything described in detail and photographed with candid honesty.

TURNED-ON YOUTH

Wide open no-holds-barred sex for fun and adventure as practiced by youth of today described in detail and photographed. Full swing from sex taboos to bi-sexual orgies.

the burning bush

by Jack Margolis

Has it ever occured to you that God is an atheist? It's true. He absolutely refuses to believe in a supreme being.

And just as you might expect from an atheist, He's not entirely a moral person. I'm not sure what His sexual hang-ups are, but did you notice that He's never married? And, as a matter of fact, the only time we know of that He's even balled a chick, it was another guy's wife. And then He knocked her up and cut out. Pretty shabby behavior, if you ask me.

It's always easy to smile at a pretty girl, but it takes an exceptionally great man to hit one.

* * *

Here's a list of some interesting things chicks have said while balling:

"Are you in yet?"

"I'm sorry. I always wet the bed when I come."

"Is there any more of that cole slaw left?"

"I think Johnny Carson's starting now."

"You know, you remind me a little of my father."

"By the way, I think I've got the clap."

"Is that it?"

"I stopped taking the pill three days ago."

"Would you please stop popping your gum."

"I guess I should've told you before we started. I'm a transsexual."

* * *

There is nothing more important to your life than your fantasies. Without them no one would ever strive to be something greater than he is, and without them there'd be no inventions, no leaders, no progress. The more enjoyable the fantasy, the more you'll work toward its realization—sometimes with an almost neurotic compulsion. People like Edison, Pasteur, Okay Freddy, Hitler and hundreds of others are famous simply because their fantasies became realities.

The best kind of fantasies, of course, are sexual fantasies, and the better they are, the better off the human species will be. The only trouble with sexual fantasies, though, is that they leave you feeling a terrible frustration.

The following method, then, is a way to enjoy your fantasies freely, without the concomitant frustration, which should lead to better fantasies and thus an improved human condition.

Invite some of your sexual partners over for an evening, and tell them exactly what you're going to do. Then lie naked on the bed with them, but don't touch them. Now, close your eyes and make believe that you're all alone. Lose all your awareness that anyone else is there. Slowly let your mind drift into that sexual desire that overcomes you sometimes at night when you're alone. Trip into your favorite sexual fantasy. Allow your body to actually feel that overpowering lust. Get deeply into it. Deeper. Let it build more and more. Let it become incredibly intense. Let it climb to the point where you want to scream out for someone. Then, when you can't stand it anymore, and are ready to take matters into your own hands, yell "Help!" Your

the swinging chef

by James Warren

When one thinks of swinging and of food at the same time, it is somehow natural to tie it all in with the concept of French living. Maybe that's a carryover from a couple of memorable visits to France, or perhaps just because I value their cuisine so highly, but I think not. To me F-R-A-N-C-E comes out the same as S-E-X. And I've got the hickies to prove it (well-healed by now, of course).

Anyway, when it comes to sex, the French have a way. And when it comes to food, they have another way. And, the two are compatible! Which is more than I can say for some of the things I see in the nutty world around me. . . .

Here's what I mean:

I picked up Gabrielle at her apartment (I forget where it was—somewhere in view of the Siene) and then directed the cab to one of those tourist-trap places, where we sipped strange green things through a straw and regaled each other in two halting languages. After a proper interval, I began to think about dinner, and asked Gabrielle for suggestions. Her reply was, to me, remarkable.

"Dinner! Now?"

"Well, yes . . . what's so strange about that?"

She collapsed into laughter, and only after much effort at self-control, managed to answer, "You Americans . . . I'll never understand you."

"That works two ways," I told her, somewhat sobered. "Maybe if you explained. . . ."

After a bit, she did. "In France, we usually go to dinner . . . well . . . afterwards."

"Oh," I replied, feeling immediately enriched by the lesson.

That, essentially, is it. I'm not sure it is a good lesson for us urbane Americans to learn just now, but that's it. The French have been great sexual innovators from the very beginning—Roman troops loved garrison duty there—and it is not at all surprising that they have acknowledged that dinner is much better . . . afterwards (we know it, but public acknowledgement is another matter).

Creative cooking can add to or detract from your sexual performance, so make sure you eat the right things, at the right time.

At any rate, if we can't sell a whole new sexual scheme to the American public, we can at least enlarge on the idea, and perhaps put it to good use (for swinging purposes).

SWM INTERVIEW

as told to Martha Stone

meet don and linda

Don and Linda are serious swingers who believe that swinging does help prevent marital problems.

Don and Linda have been swingers for five years; he is in his mid-thirties, and she is just twenty-nine. They have two children, a boy, age eight, and a girl, six. Linda is young looking, her dark, wavy hair flowing down over her shoulders. Don is slightly overweight, but is very solidly built, somewhat like a weight lifter. All in all, they show a more than merely presentable appearance. They are the type of people who would be looked at in admiration at the beach or at a formal party. They dress well and behave in a manner that shows their sophistication.

Q. What made you decide that you wanted to swing?

A. (Don) I guess I made the first moves. You know. I read the articles in the magazines, and I just got curious. I suppose most men like the idea of variety—a new woman once in a while—and I wasn't any different. I had to talk quite a while before Linda agreed to try it.

(Linda) That's for sure. I was sure he just wanted to get away from me. I was afraid he was leading up to a divorce. I was just afraid of anything that had to do with such an idea. But I did, finally, consent to try it. And we were lucky. The first time was just great, at least for me, so I was in favor of keeping it up from then on.

Q. Can you remember that first time?

A. (Linda) Can I remember! I'll never forget it! The man was just out of this world! He frenched me until I couldn't stand it any longer, and he knew as many positions for screwing as Don does! You see, the thing is, that good as Don is, we have so many other things to do, we sometimes don't spend a lot of time in sex. But, with this guy, there wasn't anything else to do. We went at it for about two hours straight—and it was the greatest! I lost count of how many times I came, and I tried things on him that I hadn't done to Don in a long time. Oh, it sure was a great introduction to swinging!

(Don) Swapping, dear, that's all it was—remember? We stayed in separate rooms the whole time. I was kind of disappointed with that, even though she was a real gas, too. When it became clear that this gal really liked frenching, we had a ball, but I kind of regretted that I couldn't see what Linda was doing. I worried about her a little, so I guess I wasn't quite as good with my girl as I might have been. That was crazy! There I was, worrying myself into semi-impotence, and Linda was living it up like a nympho! You know, it took me a while to get over it. I guess I hadn't expected her to enjoy it quite that much! While we waited for Linda to get through, we sat and talked and my gal explained that my reactions were pretty typical. Men, evidently, often don't really expect their wives will like swapping, and it comes as a shock. We men evidently harbor the idea that we're the only ones who can really turn our wives on, and we get a little upset when they really dig swapping. Crazy, isn't it?

Q. You haven't mentioned your partner's names—any special reason?

A. (Don) Oh, we just don't talk about each other by name; sort of an unwritten agreement. After all, it's not fair to tell an outsider that someone else is a swinger. We know each other by first and last names, usually. And we visit a lot of our friends at their homes. But, then we're among the "in" group, so to speak.

Q. Do you go to a lot of parties? And what are they like?

A. (Linda) We used to go to more parties than we do now, about one every weekend. Now we get to about six parties a year. We've made a lot of friends in swinging, and we don't need to go to parties to meet new people. One only has so much time, you know.

(Don) When we do go to a party, it's so that we can find new people who are compatible. We have a few friends who just go in for the party bit; they hold parties every week. When we want to go to one, we just call them up and ask to be included in the next one they throw.

(Linda) Parties here in Hollywood, at least the ones we go to, are pretty quiet and tame. We all gather about nine o'clock, usually on Saturday evening.

meet don and linda

and by ten we're in the thick of things. Our friend invites a lot of people every time, some of them totally new to the scene, so we have a bunch to choose from.

Q. Do you expect to "score" with everyone you approach?

A. (Linda) I do. Of course, I'm pretty subtle about my approach. I generally get the guy to think that he made the first move. I start out by sitting next to a fellow who looks good to me, and, after a bit of conversation, I sort of lead him into the right channel. Of course, he's there to swing, so it doesn't take too much.

(Don) I don't. Women are pretty hard to outguess. I can sit and get acquainted with a gal, only to have her accept a direct request from some character who just cuts into our conversation. Another time, I can make the direct approach, and have the girl answer that "I don't know you well enough." I probably make it about half the time—at most parties. There are some where I never get off the ground, and then the great ones where I feel as if everyone was there to honor Don. On those nights I make it with every girl I ask, and most of them are great. I'm sure it has something to do with how I feel at the beginning of the evening. Sometimes I'm just so turned on no one can resist me. Actually, women have it easier than men, usually. If they're at all good-looking, they can get any man they choose. Men are the ones who have to compete, even at a swinging party.

Q. Is there a lot of drinking or pot at parties, and do you participate?

A. (Linda) We don't like drinking parties. We figure no one is at his best when he's drunk. As for pot, sometimes, especially when we have special swinging friends over. Pot adds to sex. Alcohol just makes a person offensive and smelly.

(Don) I agree. We've had some wild times with pot. Alcohol—well, we've been to parties where someone got so soused he made a real pest of himself. Drunk women get maudlin, and drunk men sometimes get rough. That's not our cup of tea.

Q. How do you feel about group action?

A. (Linda) We dig it! I mean, we really get turned on when we can get an orgy going. You know, men and women all mixing it up. Usually end up with what we call half-way orgies though. The women can mix with each other and with the men, but the men only mix with the women. Men are usually pretty uptight about risking being called homo; women don't seem to care.

Q. How do you feel about sex with your own sex?

A. (Don) Personally, I dig it—once in a while—with the right guy. Unfortunately, there aren't many "right guys." We've known a few men who felt the way I do, and we have had some wild stuff going with them. But, generally, at a regular swinging party, I don't let on I'd go both ways. As Linda said, men are pretty uptight about the whole thing. I'd be accused of being a homo—which I'm not. I'm bisexual, if anything.

(Linda) I go with the crowd, usually. I've been at parties where the only good lay I had was from another gal. Then, at other times, I've watched a couple of other gals making it and felt no temptation to join in. It just depends on the people, I guess.

Q. Are you put off by certain body builds, like fat, or skinny?

A. (Linda) Not really. I feel more interested in the person. If a guy is interesting, he can turn me on, even if he's a slob, physically. I remember once when I almost didn't go with a guy because he looked kind of funny, but, when I accepted him, he turned out to be one of the best frenchers I've ever had. That taught me a lesson. I'll try anything—or anyone—once. If I don't like what I get, I just don't repeat the encounter.

(Don) Yes. I get pretty turned off when a woman is too fat, or is so skinny she looks like a skeleton. I suppose most men are more attentive to looks than to personality. I can remember one gal who was a real bitch; pushed her husband around, and generally was anything but the kind of gal I'd want to marry. But then, I wasn't looking for marriage—Linda and I have a good one going. I knew I didn't like that gal, but she sure was cute, physically. When I had the chance I tried to make her—and I succeeded. She wasn't very good, but I'm still glad I had the chance to find out for myself.

Q. Is swinging more physical than mental with you? I mean, do you go for the sex, but keep clear of any close relationships?

A. (Linda) When we started swinging, we figured that was the way to go. We went to parties, never exchanged addresses or phone numbers, and kept meeting new people—and losing the ones we liked as soon as we met them. Then we realized that there wasn't any problem in keeping friends if you knew them well enough to be sure that they weren't using swinging to change mates permanently. We've run into a few like that, and they're dynamite! We like our marriage the way it is, so we have a few friends who feel as we do—and that's fine. You learn to recognize the ones to stay away from.

(Don) Yeah, with those friends, we have a lot going. We get together for theater parties, and for our kids' birthdays—all the stuff you share with good friends. We spend hot Sundays at one house where they have a pool, and winter evenings at our home—we have a big fireplace and a lot of hot toddy. Lots of times, when we get together, we don't do any swinging at all. If the kids are around, or if one of us has the flu, we just visit for the pleasure of each other's company.

Q. Aren't "confirmed" swingers a bit hard and blase?

A. (Linda) Yes, I suppose some of them are. We just don't have much to do with that type. I have an idea that people who never let themselves get close to other swingers get to be pretty hard and physical about the whole thing. They don't warm up to people. We don't get that way, because we like most of the people we're with, and we're not afraid to admit it. Just because you feel close to someone you swing with doesn't mean you want to change spouses permanently. There's a lot more to marriage than sex, after all.

Q. Have you ever taken any risks in swinging?

A. (Don) I'm not quite sure what you mean by "risks." We stay away from the big parties in motels, like one that takes place in San Bernardino every spring. We just don't like to call that much attention to ourselves. So, if you mean risks of being exposed, no, we don't take them. But we have gambled with some of the people we've been with, especially at the beginning, when we were a lot more eager for new partners. Once we drove out to a house way out in the country—all by itself—to swing with some people we had heard about from somebody at a party. We could have been running right into a physical assault. As it turned out, they were pretty great people—but we didn't know what they'd be like when we started out.

(Linda) I guess you'd have to say we try never to take any chances. We're not in swinging for roller-coaster excitement; we are in it to get closer to people. Risks just aren't our thing.

Q. Can you think of any especially wild party or swinging get-together you attended?

A. (Don) I guess for me the wildest party I ever attended was one we had at our house. We had invited some five couples, and they were all pretty compatible, but one of the gals really turned on to me. We just went on and on. I came out of my "trance" a couple of times, and realized that the rest of the gang was just standing around watching us. We were just so turned on we couldn't quit.

(Linda) My wildest night was at an affair that wasn't supposed to be a swinging party at all. It took place in a big, rambling building, and there were a lot of people around. I got away with one fellow, and started by frenching him. Before long I was all wrapped up with three guys. I don't think they were doing each other; they all stuck with me. I got licked and sucked, balled and kissed, until I was all sex. Wow! That was some night. I took a week to pull out of it! Talk about being satisfied! I'll tell you, three guys to one girl is just about the right proportion!

Q. What do you consider to be very erotic. What turns you on?

A. (Linda) Maybe because of that experience, I get turned on by a lot of fellows at once. I keep coming until I just flip out. As for what turns me on in stag films, I get turned on most by lez stuff—where they're really going at it. I guess the only thing I haven't done is get together with a real lez and rub genitals. Frottage, I guess they call it. For some reason, the idea gets me all hot. I like to watch Don ball a new girl, too. He's pretty athletic, and he can really get a girl hot. I almost come when he does, he balls so hard, and I get a real kick out of watching a new gal flip out when Don makes it.

(Don) Gee, thanks, Linda. I guess my big turn-on is a gal who really knows how to french. Most chicks are pretty bad at it. They just put their lips around it and move up and down a little. That gal I got so turned on with was really an expert. Even better than Linda, and she's a whiz at it. If we're with the right couple, I get a big charge out of being frenched while I'm frenching another man. Actually, I most like to french another couple while they're making it. That way I get both pussy and cock.

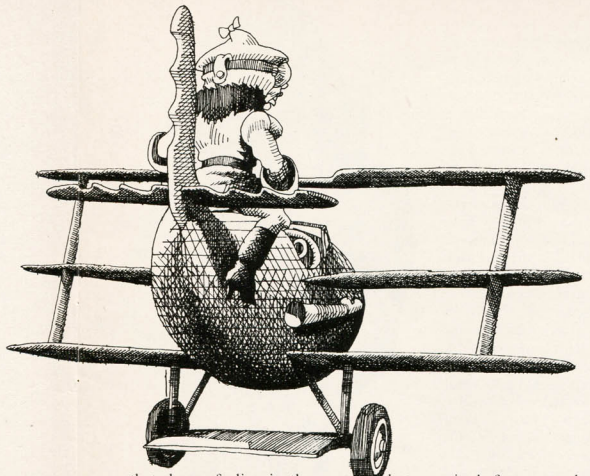
Q. Have you ever considered dropping out of swinging?

A. (Don) Heck, no. Why should we? We've had our good times and our bad times; but generally we dig the whole scene. Swinging is just one more way we have to make our lives fun and interesting. We'll probably keep it up as long as we have friends who agree with us—and I expect that will be for many years to come. ●

SWM SWINGING SINGLES

by Jay Donald

flying lesson



I've found, over the course of several years experience, that you can be the best looking guy in the world and have money running out your ears, but if you haven't got a gimmick of some sort, something to grab people, you aren't going to score, even if you belong to a mixed singles and couples swinger's club, like I do. Not regularly, anyway. Of course, if all you're looking for is a steady chick to take out then take home, or worse, a non-swinging wife, you can make it fine with nothing but what nature gave you.

If you're like me, though, a guy who digs a lot of variety in chicks, you've got to have something a little different going for you. With most guys the gimmick is their car. Jags, Corvettes, Road Runners, things like that. And don't let anyone tell you that a sexy car doesn't turn the chicks on. Others make it by being professional-quality dancers or riding motorcycles or owning a boat. All of these things work fine. Me? I fly airplanes.

On the average weekend there are plenty of chicks waiting around at the swinger's club meeting, ready and willing to trade an evening in bed with someone new, someone completely unlike their old man, for a bunch of drinks, several dances, and some flattering conversation. They're fine, for emergencies. But they aren't the kind I usually go after. The others, the chicks with some class, are a little more selective. They're willing to drink with you, dance with you, join with you in some sparkling, witty conversation (after a few drinks, any conversation sounds sparkling and witty to me), but you have to come up with something to engage their interest if you hope to get them into bed.

Since you usually don't score the first night with this kind of chick, at least not if you're one of the single members of the club, going after them cuts down a bit on the sex life. But as far as I'm concerned it's worth it. And, sometimes, going after that special chick can really be a blast, like it was with Ruth.

I had met her on Friday evening at one of the regularly scheduled swinger's parties, and we had an enjoyable evening together, drinking and dancing, before she and her husband went off with another couple. I knew right from the start that all I was going to get that night was conversation, but every time I looked at her naturally red hair, slightly slanted green eyes, heart-shaped face, outstanding (pun intended) breasts, tiny waist, and long, long legs I knew that the effort was worth it, provided it paid off on another night, hopefully tomorrow night.

During our conversation I had casually mentioned how enjoyable it had been flying up to Lake Tahoe the previous weekend in my new plane, and when she expressed an interest in my flying abilities I simply brushed it off with a show of modesty, changing the subject. Then, as she was saying goodnight in a very interesting manner, I asked her if she would care to go flying with me tomorrow. She said she would love to, and I arranged to pick her up in the early afternoon.

When we got to the airport the next afternoon the gas crew already had my plane, a Cessna 185, out on the line, fueled and ready to go. I took Ruth along with me as I made my walk-around preflight inspection, explaining to her just what I was doing; and why. I've found that it greatly eases any nervousness the passenger might feel if she sees just how careful you are about making sure the plane is ready to fly and keep flying.

I helped her into the right seat, showing her where to step and where to hold on as she swung herself in, copping a little feel on her butt as I helped her, a feel that she was well aware of, then walked around and climbed into the left seat, locking the door and sliding open the window. I had to lean across her to help her fasten her seat belt, and I gave her a quick kiss on the lips as I did so, then concentrated on getting the engine started and the plane ready to go. Once the engine was running and warmed a little I taxied down to the end of the ramp, got clearance from ground control to enter the taxiway, and headed for the end of the runway, explaining the controls and some of the simpler instruments to Ruth as we bounced along.

Both mags checked, the altimeter set, clearance from the tower, and minutes later we were in the air, turning out of the pattern as we climbed through some slight turbulence from rising hot air from the city. Then we were out over the ocean, and I pointed the nose north, trimming for a 300 foot per minute climb until we reached five thousand, then leveling out. I spent the next half-hour letting Ruth follow through with me on the controls as I did some gentle banks and turns, slight glides with the engine just ticking over, then climbs to regain the lost altitude. Then I turned the controls over to her briefly, wincing inside as she horsed the plane all over the sky, skidding turns when she remembered to use the rudder but not the ailerons, losing hundreds of feet in each turn, then almost stalling as she tried to get it back by pulling on the wheel.

Finally I took the controls back from her, then gave her a bit of a ride. I eased back on the wheel without touching the throttle, the nose climbed high above the horizon, and in seconds I began to get that sloppy feeling in the controls that said we were on the verge of a stall. The warning horn came on as the wings started to buffet, then the nose snapped down as the wings stalled out, pulling us up against our seatbelts. The left wing dropped, the plane began to spin slowly, and I let it go through three complete revolutions before feeding in throttle and opposite rudder, straightening out in a shallow dive.

I took her right down on the deck, fifty feet above the waves and a hundred feet from the beach, and held her there, giving Ruth a good look at the people on the beach and in the water, and letting her get the feel of how fast the plane seems to be moving when you're right down on the ground. I held her there for about five minutes, until I saw the masts of a sailboat ahead of us. Just before we got to the boat, when Ruth's eyes looked like they were going to pop right out of her head, I pulled the nose up hard, slamming on full throttle, and soon we were again leveled off at five-thousand.

Ruth's eyes were closed, her body relaxing in the seat, as I set the simple-minded autopilot, released my seatbelt, and reached for her. I reached down and unsnapped her seatbelt, and she came into my arms, our lips locking together in a deep, flashing-tongue kiss. I carefully got up and slid between the seats, moving into the back seat area, then pulled her after me. I had to let go of her for a minute to lean forward and reset the trim to compensate for the changed center of gravity of the airplane, then I settled back again with my arms around her.

Our lips locked together, continuing as I released the buttons of her blouse and the snap of her brassiere. With my left hand I traced the outline of her nipple first on one breast, then the other, squeezing them gently between my fingers. Then I dropped my hand to the zipper on her pants, pulling it down, and without breaking the kiss she lifted her hips so I could pull them, and her panties, off.

I broke away from her for a few quick moments to strip off my own clothes, moments which she used to pull off her open blouse and bra, leaving both of us completely naked on the back seat. I started to kiss and play with her body again, but she was in a hurry. She wrapped her hand around my cock and, pulling on it, urged me over on top of her, my legs going between hers, my cock pressing against the hair between her legs.

Having a gimmick does help develop sexual interest, and combining flying and sex makes one of the best gimmicks possible, one that really works.

Her hand guided my cock into her, then pulled me down tight, fingernails digging into my back and butt. I began to pump up and down, and in minutes she was squirming underneath me, squealing and moaning in delight, and soon both of us were near a climax.

Her legs were wrapped around mine, feet locked inside my ankles as we slammed together again and again, with me driving the full length of my cock into her cunt with each downward thrust, then drawing back until I was almost completely out of her, only to slam downwards again at the urging of her sharp nails.

We were both only seconds away from coming when the plane suddenly ran into some turbulence, and in the next few seconds we must have lost two-thousand feet. Like the drop of an elevator which leaves you feeling light, but much stronger, the plane fell away from under us, leaving our entwined bodies floating in midair, still pumping away. Then, before my mind had a chance to react to what the plane was doing, the autopilot leveled it out, and we slammed back onto the seat, both of us screaming from the sharp shock of hitting the seat and from the tremendous explosion of the mutual climax we achieved just as we hit. It was the greatest orgasm I had ever experienced as my cock drove deep into her, and later she told me that it was like nothing she had ever experienced or imagined. In a word, it was out-of-sight, and I felt like even my balls were inside her cunt.

When my cock finally stopped jerking and my heart came down out of my mouth I scrambled back up to the controls and got the plane back up to five-thousand and turned around, headed back towards the airport.

After we landed and I had the plane parked I began to think about how great it had been, and I broke one of my rules about steady dating. I asked Ruth if she'd care to come flying again tomorrow.

She said no, though, for which I guess I should be thankful. She told me that she wanted to, but that she simply didn't think she could survive another experience like that. Maybe she was right. Tomorrow Eve and I are going flying, and I'm going to look for that pocket of turbulence again. I just hope my idiot autopilot works as well tomorrow as it did today. ●

There's no question that more and more people are discussing orgies, and with more than just a detached curiosity. As a matter of fact, orgies are rapidly replacing marijuana, Viet Nam and the Stillman diet as fodder for cocktail party and after dinner conversation.

Even the media has discovered orgies. Both the New York Times and the Los Angeles Times have written feature stories about them, complete with pictures of orgy goers and studied pontifications by exploitive sociologists and psychologists. Playboy Magazine, along with many other magazines, has devoted many articles and discussions to them, and it's only a matter of time before Time Magazine makes it a cover story (and who will be man of the year?).

With all this talk, surely it must be patently clear to even the most committed onanist that orgies have become popular—indeed, they may one day even overtake protest marching or glass bottle collecting as the popular leisure time activity.

Just how many people attend orgies is impossible to approximate. People who have taken an interest in the subject have guessed anywhere from five hundred thousand to fourteen million people, but any guess is academic. Perhaps the question will be included in the next government census, and then we'll know for sure.

Some people claim that orgies have always been with us, it's just that, like all sexual things, people now are talking about them more openly—but such is not the case. Orgies may have had a short flurry of activity in certain isolated areas, such as in Catherine the Great's bedroom or Louis XIV's court, but this is the first time in world history that orgies have cut across class lines or have been so diffused geographically. It may be true that orgies have been around since the first Neanderthal man dragged two women back to his cave, but they have never before been so widely practiced.

Also, it's extremely doubtful that orgies are just a fad. They'll be with us as a meaningful cultural fact until there's a giant worldwide upheaval. This is because orgies are a direct result of one single historically significant event—the enormous and sudden rise of technology.

The impact of technology is so enormous that it has effected us culturally, economically, morally, and philosophically, and as we get deeper into the technological age, our behavior will become more and more varied. Orgies will soon become a completely acceptable aspect of normal sexual activity.

Of course, technology has not directly caused the widespread practice of orgies. Things don't work that simply. But technology has removed those barriers which kept people from expressing this particular form of sexual freedom, and, at the same time, has left a large void in our lives which orgies, for many, seem to fill quite comfortably.

The Death of the Double Standard

The "double standard" is the term used to describe the application of those two sets of moral criteria which dictate the acceptability of men and women's sexual behavior. In other words, it's all right for a man to mess around, but not a woman. As a matter of fact, the double standard makes part of a man's reputation directly proportional to the number of women he's balled, whereas the woman's reputation is inversely proportional to the number of men she's balled. Or at least this is the way I learned it in high school algebra (taught by a Miss Spring—who balled no one, directly or inversely).

This double standard has been with us, it seems, since the dawn of time, and most people have accepted its justness without question. If they were to question it, though, they would find that it has nothing to do with "God's Will," or any other concept of pure moral or ethical behavior. It's simply a question of economics, and nothing but economics, and God's Will is only its tool. In fact, it can easily be demonstrated that the basis of all sin, of all immorality, is economics and nothing else.

Some of you may be muttering "sophistry" or "balderdash," and others of you may have fallen asleep, but if we go back as little as a hundred years and examine the way the world was then, we can see why the double standard was born out of economic necessity and why it worked—and worked well. We can also see why it is no longer relevent to today's society.

As late as the middle of the last century there were almost no jobs for women. If a woman did not have a man to support her, she would either have to be a domestic, or a prostitute. A few, with means and an education, could become governesses, but there were obviously very few women who could gain such employment. If a woman did not want to be turned out of her home to die in the streets, or to survive at the lowest level of existence, she would have to be obedient to the man who supported her, her husband or her father.

The double standard is dead, and today's free woman is leading the way into new forms of sexual expression and adventure.

Thus, in order for a woman to survive, she had to be obedient to a man. And what did the man want? If it was her father, he wanted her to be chaste. If it was her husband, he wanted her to be faithful—and both for economic reasons.

As far as fathers were concerned, female children were always a burdensome liability. They didn't carry on the family name, and they couldn't even work in a business if the father was lucky enough to have one, nor were they of any great benefit on a farm. The best the daughters could do to ease the father's economic burden was to help their mother in the house, thereby saving the hiring of one maid (whose salary would be almost nonexistant anyway).

So it is clear that the female child was a drain on the father's economic resources from the time she was born until the time when the father finally married her off. Daughters were such a liability, in fact, that when one reached her majority and was eligible for marriage, the father was willing to pay someone a dowry to marry her. And the more unattractive the girl, the larger the dowry. Money has a strange way of making ugly girls look more beautiful, and beautiful girls ugly.

It stands to reason that the father wanted his daughter to remain as eligible as possible in order that he could marry her off as soon as possible, and anything which worked against her eligibility worked against her survival as a member of her father's household.

The keynote to a daughter's eligibility, aside from her personality and physical attractiveness, was her chastity. No man wanted to marry a woman who had a reputation for balling around—because he would worry that she would do the same after they were married. And if she were to have a child, she would obviously cause the complete destruction of her eligibility. No prospective groom wanted the economic liability of someone else's child—he wasn't even all that excited about his own. All the cartoons we've seen of a girl holding a baby in the doorway of a house, while her father pointed out into the cold, had a definite factual basis in history.

In discussing a daughter's eligibility, it's interesting to note that the older a girl got, the less likely she was to marry—which is why, where there were a number of daughters and only a small supply of eligible men around, the younger couldn't marry before the older one. The question of a prospective groom's eligibility was totally dependent on how much money he had, or what his prospects were. The father didn't want to end up supporting his daughter (and possibly his son-in-law) after she married. If a survey were taken of what kind of girls eloped, we'd probably find that either they weren't the oldest unmarried daughter, or the groom was a ne'er-do-well, but a sexy one.

Just as the father expected chastity, the husband expected faithfulness. In the old days a woman was considered part of a man's estate. She was a chattel, somewhat like his horse or his plow. There's a term in law called consortium, which refers now to the conjugal fellowship of husband and wife. The original application was to the services a wife performed, with sexual services a prominent, if not the predominant, factor. A husband could sue another man if that man did something which hindered the husband's ability to make love to his wife. A classic example of this is the fairly recent California case of Gist vs. French, wherein a husband sued a doctor who accidentally destroyed his wife's vagina in an operation. The wife sued for malpractice, of course, but the man sued too, for loss of consortium. You'll be glad to hear that he won; the court awarded him $50,000—a fair price, don't you think?

So we see that the world has considered a wife a man's possession. He owned her, and he treated her, in many ways, just like a possession. If another man rode his horse without his permission, and he did nothing, he would be the laughing stock of his community. The same thing applied to his wife. His wife had to be loyal and faithful to him, or he would have to get rid of her. His reputation, and thus his ability to stay alive economically, rested partly upon his relationship with his wife.

Thus we see that a woman, because she was totally dependent on a man, had to be chaste while she lived with her father and faithful while she lived with her husband. The man, of course, being dependent only upon his own ability, could jolly well do what he pleased, and the woman had no recourse except tears and other guilt inducing devices.

Now, understanding that a female child has to be chaste in order to survive economically, how would you, as a parent (especially as a mother whose own position was never very secure), keep a growing girl, tortured with lustful thoughts, from balling the neighborhood boys? How do you tell an untutored, provincial girl that she should not touch pee pees with little Roger next door, because if she does she might get pregnant and, if she gets pregnant her father will throw her out, and if she is thrown out she will have to be a prostitute or a scullery maid—or die? Most girls hadn't the vaguest idea that touching pee pees led to babies anyway (and probably neither did some of the parents). Obviously, a logical explanation of the abstract concepts involved here could never work. So, something else was invented, something which worked so well that it caught on and was passed from neighbor to neighbor and from parent to child, for hundreds and even thousands of years, until the reasons for its birth were forgotten. This something was called "morality."

The concept of morality is highly abstract, subjective and relative, and changes with each tick of the clock. It doesn't lend itself well to incorporation in something like an army training manual, or to any other formal educational device. It must be taught by inuendo, appeals to authority, threats of punishment, promises of rewards, and a whole lot of unconscious conditioning.

The only way to overcome the enormous drive to have intercourse was to condition the child, from the time it was born, to fear, deeply and reflexly, the social consequences of the sex act.

They went so far as to make any kind of sex sound terrible—even masturbation. At various times I heard that masturbation would make me crazy, blind, grow hair on my palm, and give me pimples. But even this didn't stop me, despite of the fact that I wasn't looking forward to trying to shave a pimply palm while crazy and blind.

This conditioning against sex was really a relatively simple matter, and used both positive and negative rewards. One form was to exaggerate the powers of the father by inventing a God with a very strict set of rules, who would get terribly pissed off if you disobeyed him. The threatened punishments of God appealed to a child's vivid imagination. Fire and brimstone, everlasting damnation, the eternal deprivation of all the heavenly wonders—yes, not only were you deprived of the heavenly rewards, but you had to suffer the punishments of hell. Unless you were a doctor or a baby; in which case you went to limbo—but that wasn't such a good place either. There's hardly any night life there at all.

A secondary method of conditioning, slightly less impressive but certainly more real, was the implied threat of parental and peer obliquity. Girls who messed around were called whores—a word which got its strength not from the sense of the crime committed, but from the emotionalism in the way the word was uttered. You don't say, lightly and smilingly, "Oh, she's a whore." You say it with brows furrowed and the throat constricted with contempt; "She's a whore!"

This secondary or social method of conditioning was much more subtle and indirect than the primary or religious method. A parent rarely ever said to a child "if you mess around, you'll be a whore." The parents would just use the word in describing a girl who was loose, but the contempt in the way they used that word was so evident that the child knew she would never want it used on her. All of this was taught through inuendo, through the parents unconscious verbalization of emotion.

To summarize, a female child was taught that making love before marriage was a sin against God, would lose her the love of her father, would cause her peer group to avoid her, and would cast her in the category of a whore, tramp or some other reprehensible state something less than human. But she was taught all this stuff for only one reason: She might get pregnant or loose her reputation and thus become unmarriageable and an economic burden on her father.

But while this double standard had a valid reason to exist years ago, it has none now. First, because of contraceptive devices and an awareness of simple biology, women can now make love all they want without fear of getting pregnant—and if she somehow screws up and does get pregnant, she can still get an abortion (legally in many states, and easily obtainable everywhere); second, any woman can get a job and be totally self-sufficient if no man wants her; and third, in big cities a girl's reputation is almost meaningless.

As to this last point, it should be pointed out that, with the new morality, it is a fact that the worst reputation a girl over twenty can have is that she's still a virgin, and, luckily, I happen to have a personal experience handy to prove it.

Recently I was working in an office which employed an inordinately attractive 21 year old girl as a receptionist, and I immediately befriended her. Late one evening I called her at home and induced her to come over to my house. When she arrived she was wearing a coat over a night gown. With visions of sugar plums dancing in my head we soon made for the bed, where we amused ourselves for an hour or so in heated and varied foreplay—but, in clinical terms, I was unable to effect penetration. The first few times she stopped me I thought of it as high adventure, and we then spent another hour doing everything else we could think of. But finally, failing to understand her unique philosophy, I jokingly accused her of being a virgin. This immediately stopped all conversation, and a moment later, she angrily jumped out of bed, grabbed her coat, and left.

Luckily, she couldn't start her car, and she sheepishly knocked on the door and asked to use the phone. Putting on my most menacing face, I told her I would not let her use the phone until she told me why she had gotten so angry. Finally, through tears, she told me that she was indeed a virgin, was terribly ashamed of it, and made me promise not to tell the other people in the office.

This was my first real inkling of the new morality in action—yet despite this, the double standard is still being taught today. Like any religious rubric or superstition, it's an idealization, an abstraction, removed from the real world and deeply imbedded in our unconscious. If our grandparents believed it, they taught it to our parents, who in turn taught it to us. Even when we're convinced logically that it's false, we will still unconsciously pass it on to our children.

Many of today's women realize that the double standard is garbage—that what's okay for a man is okay for a woman. And although they may occasionally feel a few shreds of guilt, they ignore them. Many of the kids coming along have a new morality, completely lacking in the double standard. It's going to be hard for most of the older members of society to accept it and adjust to it. There is, and will be for a long time, a lot of name calling.

Out of the ashes of the now dead double standard rises the orgy. Once women realize that making love is a pleasure in and of itself, and is not opprobrious in any way, then eventually she will also realize that there is nothing wrong with an orgy. It may take another generation before it becomes totally acceptable, but the signs are clearly evident now.

"Well, maybe we should take it a little easy, Augustus . . . Don't forget, we have to attend the orgy tonight!!"

Some girls still feel it's "wrong" to make love unless they're married. Some feel it's "wrong" to make love unless they're emotionally involved and committed. Others feel it's "wrong" to make love unless they know the person. Still others feel it's "wrong" to make love to more than one person at a time. And then there are those who simply enjoy the hell out of making love.

Technology Has Created An Excess of Leisure Time

Years ago our primary concern was figuring out how to produce enough in order to stay alive. This was so all-consuming and so difficult that most people had to work almost every waking moment, from dawn to dusk, seven days a week. In fact, it's quite possible that the Sabbath (indigenous to almost all cultures) was invented to force people to rest, both for their own good and the good of society. If everyone stopped working for a certain period of time, then the threat of others getting ahead while you rested, i.e., the threat of competition, was obviated. This was considered so important that to work when everyone was supposed to be resting was called a crime, and was punishable by fine or imprisonment. Even today some communities still have these laws, called "blue laws," on the books.

But as science discovers more labor saving devices and more efficient ways of using man-hours, people are discovering that they have time on their hands and no way to spend it.

Leisure time is really a new phenomena. It's only been since the end of the second world war that the majority of people began to work a 40 hour week. It's only been a few years since we've begun celebrating the three day weekend with any frequency, and this was made possible by the Federal Government changing the times when we celebrate national holidays—a move not much different from creating a slightly longer Sabbath. And it's only been in the last year that serious consideration has been given to the four day work week. In the middle of 1969 the Plumber's Union in Los Angeles went on strike for, among other things, a four day work week. Many people were shocked at their audacity, and, after a lot of arguing, it was finally refused. But now hundreds of industries have started the practice, and it's spreading fast. The four day work week seems to be the best solution, at least for now, to the problem of how to keep people working when there's so little work to be done.

This new leisure time activity problem is not exclusive to men. Housewives have also acquired a tremendous amount of time to waste. All the labor saving devices are now cheaply available to almost everyone, and they have released women from the kitchen. Soon it's going to get even better (or worse, if you're still imbued with the Protestant work ethic). The new micro-wave ovens can cook in only 45 minutes a roast which used to take three hours. Pre-packaged and convenience foods have become incredibly cheap, and now almost everyone can own a dishwasher, disposal and washer-dryer.

As a result, husbands and wives will be spending much more time together with nothing to do. And with both of them being bored, most of their time will

My most erotic experience? Sure, I remember it—quite well, as a matter of fact. It was one of those accidents that always seem to be happening to me.

The only thing I'm sorry about is that I never tried swinging with my husband before we got divorced. Who knows, if we had, I might not be divorced now.

are sex film stars really swingers?

The answer to that question is a good, firm Yes and No.

Having written, produced, and directed over two dozen feature films of the sex type, plus some twenty hours of "shorts" and having had a dozen years as a "figure photographer," I just might be considered competent enough to give you a reasonably accurate answer.

The mistake is thinking that figure models and girls who act in sex films are somehow different than any other kind of girl. They're no different than an equal number of pretty, uninhibited secretaries, cashiers, carhops, nurses, housewives, or the like. If you were to group all the women around by beauty, they'd be up there right under motion picture actresses and jet-set demi-mondes. If you were to group girls by lack of inhibitions, they'd be at or near the top. If you were to group them by their "swinging" records, they'd be spread all over the scale.

The key factors are that they are young, pretty, uninhibited, and are being given a great deal of ego-gratification by being paid for their beauty.

By the standards of the mythical "man in the street" they are swingers. By their own standards they are simply free, freer than most they see, much freer than their families were, much, much freer than their families know.

Another key factor is not to confuse nudity and sex, or simulated sexual action on the screen, with real sex. (If we are talking pornofilms, that's a different bag.) I have seen many girls give a most rousing demonstration of erotic action, and when the cameras stop simply walk away, totally uninvolved with the other actor. And I have seen people, where they were supposed to be faking it, actually getting it on.

To put it in another light, were you to meet a figure model or sex film actress you would probably have a much clearer picture of your chances much quicker than with, say, your secretary or a waitress. Note that I did not say a better chance. Just a quicker, clearer idea of where you stand. The simple reason is a lack of inhibition about sex, about talking about it, about doing it or thinking about it. Sex is simply part of their

Since their attitude is thus, you actually do have a better chance of sharing pleasure with her, since this attitude gives her a wider scope of action, a less inhibited repertoire of techniques, and so forth.

On one film of mine the lead actress did several very hot scenes with the male lead, a handsome young man. But all her attention was on my cameraman. Between shots she'd rub all over him (she was nude) and stroke his crotch, and if I called a break she was giving him head, or trying to. She would even show up at his doorstep in the middle of the night. If he seemed at all reluctant (he is quite attractive and has a rich sex life) she would offer to do all sorts of weird things to attract him.

Another girl, the lead in another film of mine, would have nothing to do with anyone on the crew or in the cast, and would even drag her feet during the sex scenes.

I once visited a friend on the set of a porno film and, during a break while others were elsewhere, commented on how pretty this nude lady looked lying on the purple satin sheets. I said I would certainly like to make love with her some time. She held out her arms and there I was, folks! And this was five minutes after she finished balling a man with a penis the size of your forearm!

Most secretaries, waitresses, housewives, and so on are not running around naked, either simulating sex or really involved, so they do not have these opportunities to demonstrate their sexual freedoms in quite these ways. It is my belief that if you took an ordinary pretty secretary and put her in a sex film or two she'd be just as uninhibited, once she became used to the idea.

But most secretaries, housewives, et al, have overriding pressures that they feel are more important. What will their boss or husband think? Is the possible reaction of the others going to lead to trouble, and is it going to be worth it? How will it effect their job? And so on.

But a "naked lady" literally lives on sex, on her beauty, on the illusion or actuality of sexual intercourse. Many of them were secretaries or housewives or schoolgirls or waitresses, and they didn't like what they were doing and this seemed like much more fun. And more profitable. They are simply more sex-oriented than most, certainly in a straight-forward, practical manner.

So sex film stars are no more, no less a swinger than other girls . . . except they admit it more freely, they work at it more easily, and they have more opportunity.

I know one male porno film "star" who is on an enormous ego-trip. With clothes on he's sort of tall, gawky and very straight looking. But naked and in rut, he's been endowed with a HUGE penis that he thinks girls should really get excited over. Some do, but most find the man more interesting than the inches.

Another male "star" of sex films is also endowed with a cock of truly magnificent proportions. It is the only interesting thing about an otherwise dull, boorish oaf. He thinks of nothing that is not oriented somehow to his crotch, and sees the entire world in relation to it. He brags constantly about his "conquests," and refers boringly often to the size of his organ.

There are, of course, those among the membership in the small, lusty group of sex stars who are swingers with a capital Wow. Girls who are so wild about fucking they care not at all about the man attached to the organ, so long as the organ is hard.

But, these are in the minority, and most people who work in sex films are no more—or any less—a swinger than the general population. They are people just like yourself. Freer than most, more attractive than most, it gives them more chances to consummate relationships. But that is true of all attractive people. They make their own rules, for themselves and those about them. If they become nationally or internationally known, they start making rules that others follow. Look at all the movie stars that now openly live together and have "illegitimate" babies without the "cover" of marriage, which they formerly would have sought.

They swing. Models swing. Porno film stars swing. You swing. But it is all in the definition. It's all in how you define the limits.

With most sex film stars there aren't any. I know, because I've tried to find the stopping point. So far all I've found is the Orgasm, God's way of telling you when to stop.

For a while, anyway. ●

A GREAT AMERICAN SWINGER

by Gary Paulson

swinging through history

Ben Franklin did more than just sign the Declaration of Independence and invent eyeglasses.

There is strong evidence that the first True Swinger was a man named Urg. Cave paintings show him riding on a low-slung, four-on-the-floor mammoth with a removable hardtop and magnesium see-through tusks. He is depicted wearing a smart double-breasted yak-skin blazer, off-blue shades made of finely ground mica and a live boa constrictor ascot. Around him on the mammoth are four scantily clad chicks who are performing unnatural acts on each other—and Urg—as they are apparently moving towards a glacier in the background, on which can be seen several ski-runs and a large sign advertising Michelob. There are five sets of skis mounted on the rack just over the mammoth's touch-hole. It is to be assumed they are going skiing.

Unfortunately, or perhaps fortunately when you consider Urg's privacy, the rest of the cave paintings in the series—showing his bedroom, den, and sailing raft—have been so smeared by following generations of hands that they cannot be made out. There is one particular picture—he's apparently in his den, with a woman, a live sabertooth tiger, four giant snails and what appears to be about fifty pounds of tallow—which offers quite a lot for speculation. But it is pointless to even guess what one would do with four giant snails.

If documentation is lacking on Urg, it is fairly mountainous on a later swinger—the subject of this article—Benjamin Franklin (or Balling Ben, as the ladies of Paris might have called him had they used modern terminology).

At a time when most people were worrying about revolution, Black Death, tea parties, and how to sew flags, Big Ben was starting the great American tradition of swinging. Strangely, or perhaps not, by spending all his time in Paris—or nearly all of it—jumping from bed to bed, he actually accomplished more than other diplomats. Probably because the beds he was jumping from belonged to French official's wives.

He was probably the first American swinger to use the old I-didn't-really-have-anything-to-do-with-it innocence that is still so effective. Or, as he put it in a letter:

"Somebody gave it out that I lov'd Ladies; and then everybody presented me their Ladies (or the Ladies presented themselves) to be embrac'd, that is to have their Necks kissed . . ."

Yeah. Right on, Ben—that still works.

He adds, in an interesting footnote, that "The French Ladies have . . . 1000 other ways of rendering themselves agreeable."

It is doubtful, even today, that a swinger would show enough enterprise to promote one thousand different ways. Sixty-some, perhaps, and there is word out of a groovy chick in Des Moines who is bragging about one-hundred and four positions (she employs a tame artichoke)—but a thousand? It will be a while before anybody tops Ben. (No pun intended, there.)

Along with other firsts, it is likely that Ben was the first All-American Swinger to love 'em and leave 'em. Authorities disagrée slightly, but it is probable that during his brief stay in Paris he had up to, and perhaps more than, eighteen affairs. Small wonder—he had the pick of the crop. At a huge banquet there was a contest—with three-hundred of Paris' most beautiful women competing—to pick the most beautiful and charming woman. The winner got the right to crown Ben with a laurel wreath. It would be nice to know what the wreath was for. There is a painting, done by one Baron Jolly, showing the winner crowning Ben. If the artist is at all accurate, Ben had damn good taste. By even today's standards she isn't bad bed material.

But where our Swinging Forefather made the scene best was in partying and boozing it up. With him, working as a diplomat but without Franklin's success, was John Adams, who wrote a particularly nasty (probably envious) letter home about Ben:

story and drawings by June Smith

Well, I finally did it—I went to an orgy! Been thinking about it for some time now, and just never got up the courage or whatever it is one needs to attend a bacchanal. Ever since I finished my Erotica series of paintings I have toyed with the idea of attending one of the many swingers' clubs that abound in Los Angeles. I thought perhaps I might be able to capture the multiple lovers on canvas and come up with a whole new concept. Let me tell you what happened, and how I responded to my feelings.

A brief moment first to describe the place and my entrance. I cleared the way for myself by meeting and discussing my plans with Marty, one of the men who runs the club. He had been most cordial and open to my artistic project, assuring me that I would be welcome and that I could draw and move about at will. He also assured me that I could dress or undress, participate or not participate, without any pressure from the guests.

The place is called Sandstone, and sits atop Topanga Canyon high above the ocean. To reach it one travels a twisting mountain road which goes on and on until you think it will never end. Just about the time you are convinced you are lost you come across a stone fence that is identified: Sandstone Retreat. You enter a dirt road that weaves back and forth for about a mile, and when you finally end your journey you find yourself on a rustic estate with a number of small cottages and one large house. There is a separate structure that is semi-enclosed and houses an olympic-sized pool. The whole feeling of the place is very lovely; there is an unobstructed view of the ocean on either side of the estate, and the sight is breathtaking.

I arrived at Sandstone one Saturday evening about six-thirty. I parked my car and went to the guest entrance, where I was greeted by Marty. He smiled warmly and asked me to sign the guest book. He was nude, as were the rest of the guests in the large living room. This ornately furnished room had a huge fireplace, several comfortable couches, and doors that opened onto terraces which overlooked the ocean. Marty suggested that I make myself at home, and within seconds people were smiling and saying hello to me. I was faced with an immediate decision: to strip or not to strip. Usually, when I work I keep my clothes on, and have done so during nude therapy and other occasions where nudity was part of the scene. I've done it because, generally, I feel more comfortable that way. But this was another scene, and I felt in this instance my remaining clothed would be an impediment to my work. So, I went downstairs to another large room and stripped. Funny, I have no hesitation about appearing nude in front of my family. Ours is a very free household, the whole pack of us are used to running about naked, but I had never before undressed in front of strangers. I found I liked it. It was comfortable and appropriate for the surroundings.

I went back upstairs and found that the place was, as yet, comparatively empty. I was told there would be about eighty people at the height of the evening. Those who were there were sitting about chatting, as you and I might at any social gathering or cocktail party. It was quite warm, so I decided to have a swim. There were several couples already in the water. As I entered the pool I realized they were screwing. They were totally absorbed with one another, and I must say I found them most fascinating. There's something about fucking in a swimming pool that's very sensuous to both participants and onlookers. Their motions in the water were languid and exaggerated, and the ripples they sent out added to a very sexy scene. I watched, thinking I would try later to capture this in a drawing. A few other people arrived, and I soon found myself in comfortable conversation with them.

If all of this sounds very objective, and you're curious as to my subjective response to this and the ensuing activities, I must truthfully relate to you that I was never turned on sexually. When I decided to go to Sandstone I had no idea what my response would be, other than the fact that basically I just don't care for the idea of group sex. But, once I exposed myself to such a scene, I had to be ready for all preconceived ideas to fade. Otherwise I wouldn't attempt to draw it. I would have been too concerned with my image, and that would have gotten in the way of my creative responses. What I'm saying is, I suppose if I had been turned on I would have participated in the festivities. If that had been the case I probably wouldn't have been able to write this account. More likely I would have kept quiet about the whole affair, since I don't think it's necessary to announce to the whole world that you've just balled Los Angeles society. But, as it happens, I remained unstirred physically during the evening.

After my swim I took a quick shower, dried myself off, and went back to the living room. It was now about seven-thirty and more guests had arrived. Many of the new people were old friends; the majority were husband and wife. Single men are allowed to join Sandstone, but after 7 p.m. only couples are allowed on the premises. Whether you are married or not makes no difference, but you are expected to bring someone you care about to share in the action. Members are allowed to bring guests on a one-time basis, and single women are allowed without male escort.

two experienced swingers answer your questions

Roberta and Leonard have been swinging for years, since long before swinging became "in," and they believe in doing everything they can to help new swingers along the road.

roberta tells all

Q. This whole thing about swinging has got me flustered. I always thought I had a happy marriage, until, several months ago, my husband began saying he thought we ought to get into swinging. I said NO, but he's been after me about it ever since. Hardly a day goes by but what he nags me about it. To tell the truth, I'm worried sick about the problem, because I'm scared. I'm scared that I might lose my husband if I keep saying no, and I'm scared at the very idea of going to a swinging party. I'm not the kind of person to participate in an orgy. I'm a little embarrassed about the idea of being nude in front of other people, and I certainly don't want to get involved in an orgy where I'd be forced to do anything I didn't want. Do you think I ought to try? Would I have to participate?

A. Your fears are understandable, and I can assure you that all but the most uninhibited and gregarious women feel much the same as you when faced with the idea of going to a party for the first time. Sure you should go. I can also assure you that your fears will probably dissolve on that very first occasion. In the first place, when you finally consent, your husband will be so pleased he may be especially grateful for a long time. In the second, swingers are pretty great people, and you would NEVER be forced to do anything you didn't want to do. Lots of people go to a party for the first time and sit around, drink, eat, converse, without participating sexually at all. Besides, you might meet someone there who really turns you on, and there are no social restrictions against your following through right away. Don't ever worry about your body—you'll see all kinds of bodies, and, when everyone is disrobed, you just accept the differences the same as you'd accept differences in the clothes people choose. Lastly, statistics show that almost all wives who are first dragged to parties end up being the greater enthusiast. Although we women don't talk about it much, it's well known that a woman's sexual desires, the number of possible orgasms, and the length of time she can truly dig sex on any given occasion, are far greater than a man's. Once you throw yourself into the spirit of the thing you'll find that you will, quite likely, have a better time than at any other kind of party you've ever been to. I even recommend it over a foursome, because you have so many men to choose from that you can even do the asking if you want to. No good swinger is ever hurt to have someone say "thanks very much, but not now," and you are free to say it, too—with the proviso, of course, that you accept the same statement from anyone you might approach. But, by all means, go, and have a good time.

Q. I like swinging—I think it's a happy way of life. But I have to keep it kind of quiet, because it's frowned on by society—at least by a lot of people. Is my enjoyment of swinging wicked or immoral?

A. Not by swingers it isn't. It's too bad, but we do have to live in a world full of people with prudish, puritan hangups. I recommend talking to people about it obliquely, in a kind of philosophical way, as much as possible. After all, the world is getting more broad-minded every day, even if it is slow.

Q. I am very drawn to certain persons of my own sex. Lately, emboldened by the more free atmosphere of the past few years, my boy friend and I have made friends with a few women and have had threesomes. Does this make us swingers? And why is it supposed to be wrong to express physical affection with a member of your own sex?

A. Yes to your first question, and I haven't any idea to your second. Swingers are about the only people who are openly permissive about this. We believe that anything which is loving is not wrong, and usually good sex is good loving, so if you feel fondness, affection and love for someone, sex should be a part of that expression. If that were true, we might be able to eliminate the words "homosexual" and "lesbian" from the dictionary!

Q. I get plenty of sex, but I still want—or at least like—the do it yourself stuff too. Is this abnormal?

A. Not in my book. Of course, it depends on how much you want to do to yourself. Isn't it great that we now know that a little masturbation never hurt anyone? Far cry from the old days, when girls weren't supposed to do it at all, and boys were told it would cause blindness or insanity or their balls would shrivel up! I've had girls tell me that the best technique they ever employed was with a little vibrator on the clitoris. But then, when we get deeper into the discussion, they usually admit that "Well, of course it's different." In other words, masturbation can give a different kind of satisfaction than regular intercourse, and sometimes one hits the spot, pardon the pun, and sometimes the other is what does it. Or some other form, be it oral, anal, or whatever. Why limit yourself? And especially, why be frustrated? Now, that's what might really cause insanity . . .

Q. I just don't want to talk about this to anyone, and you are the only source I can think of to turn to. My problem is that I have incestuous feelings towards my son, and I don't know what to do about it. Up to now my sex life has been very satisfactory, my husband and I swing and we haven't taken any great pains to keep it a dark secret, even from our son, although we don't talk about it with him either. But he and I have always had a good relationship, and he talks to me about his first girlfriend. All of a sudden I find I envy her, because I know they have slept together. He is tall and handsome and I'm very proud of him, but I feel a little ashamed and disturbed that I'd like to go to bed with him myself. Shall I tell him?

A. Probably not, unless you know him a lot better than you have mentioned in your question. A certain amount of jealousy over his first girlfriend is quite normal, and even though they may be latent, incestuous feelings are also normal and probably always present in the parent. Experts tell us this is because, when children, we all had to vie for our sexually opposite parent's love. Your son may already have gone through those feelings for you. He may even be feeling some of them, probably unconsciously, today. If you feel close enough to talk about it in a light-hearted way with your husband, he may confess to having the same feelings towards your daughter if you have one, or towards little girls in general. If your feelings don't die down

leonard tells all

Q. Should I swing? I'm fairly happily married, but I have these urges to see if I'm missing anything.

A. Don't ask me to rubber stamp your libido. That's a question you must answer yourself. No one else can do it for you, any more than they can tell you what to feel about a sunset or scrambled eggs or war. It is neither my desire nor my intention to moralize or "make it okay" for you to do or not do anything in your sex life. Several months ago I was phoned by a girl swinger I knew, who asked me almost immediately if I would like to come over and go to bed with her. Since I had no desire to do this, yet I like the lady, I had to find a polite way out. In searching out her mind I discovered that she had tangled herself into an intricate web of guilts and desires, and it took me over an hour to get it somewhat straight. She was "going with" a married man, whose wife was well-aware of the relationship. In fact, all three often worked together in certain cinematic capacities. She wanted to be loyal to him, yet he did not see all that much of her, and she was horrrrr-nnnyy. It finally came out that she was asking my permission to swing, as if my approval made it all all right. By going to bed with me, a person she respected, it would be all right to go to bed with other men. I informed her I was not her court-appointed conscience, nor would I make value judgements about her behavior. If her behavior hurt herself, or others, then I probably would think it stupid behavior. If her behavior hurt no one, and gave one or more people pleasure, then I saw nothing wrong with it. Such a simple and obvious—even ordinary—truth apparently hadn't dawned on her. As to whether you have missed anything, I haven't the faintest. I realize such answers are hardly definitive, but you have provided me with little information. Look around you, ask questions, read. Does any of the sexual activity you read about interest you? I was once approached by a woman I had made love to a number of times, with the suggestion that we try anal intercourse. We did, and when it was over she said, "Well, it was nice, but I don't think it will be a regular item," and checked it off her mental list of "Things To Do Someday." Make up your own list. Show it to your mate. Maybe she has one, too, and there might be a lot of common ground you have both left undiscussed. If that doesn't work, see what others might have in mind.

Q. I masturbate frequently, and I suspect more often than the "norm." I know all the "authorities" say it's all right, and it won't stunt my growth, but I just can't get enough. I have weekly coitus with a girl friend, but it isn't enough. Am I abnormal?

A. No, you're a masturbator. Probably everyone is, and no one talks about it very much. No doubt you simply don't get enough of the kind of sex you want and need from your girl friend. Either you need another girl friend—or more of them—or a different set of fantasies. Since you must think about something during masturbation, it might as well be something or someone that excites you and somehow fulfills those needs. Thus, movie stars and certain figure models are "masturbation figures" constantly. I have a friend who once claimed he didn't like to masturbate, which astonished the group of males he revealed this to. "My trouble," he said, "is that for masturbation images I use Thelma Ritter and Phyllis Diller." If you are Doing It More and Enjoying It Less, you need a new set of goals, or a new orientation.

Q. I like to drink and I like to screw, but the two don't always mix. Is this psychological or medical? Is it me, or does booze cause impotence?

A. Both, either one, or neither. Medically, a chronic alcoholic can develop peripheral neuropathy, and if it becomes severe enough, impotence usually results. Being just plain drunk (or "tipsy" or "smashed" or "high"—pick your own level of blast) can also affect you, just as it affects your sight, motor nerves, coordination, and so forth. The sex act, if well and properly done, really requires the full functioning of all your senses and abilities, as well as your experience and imagination. To impair that functioning is stupid. Which is why most swingers either do not drink or drink only moderately, in the manner of social "oil" and to loosen inhibitions. The idea is sexual pleasure, not alcoholic oblivion. Your nutritional deficiencies also may affect you. Good lovers should be in good health. Eat better. (Not more—better!)

Q. I am unmarried and I met this couple who have often expressed a desire to swing, but are not interested in a trial. What do I do?

A. Easy. Find yourself a girl who wants to swing not only with you but with the other couple. Or several girls. Just getting a girl so that you can have someone to "trade" is insulting to her, of course, so you must open the subject carefully. If you already have one or more girls that you see, select one and talk to her about it. Or double-date with the other couple and let her meet them. Then talk to her about it.

Q. Once a night is enough. Sometimes it's almost too much. I feel really tired afterwards, and sometimes my sex partners want to continue. I hate to disappoint them, but I'm often exhausted. Is it me? Am I undersexed, or what?

A. No, you are probably in poor health. I would suggest reading Let's Eat Right To Keep Fit, a fascinating book by Adelle Davis. Most of us suffer from severe nutritional deficiencies, usually as the result of bad habits and the foods available to us, which have been terribly devalued nutritionally. I, too, was feeling "down," and within a week of starting on her suggested diet (and only haphazardly to begin with) I perked up quickly. It's either your poor health or you put on such an acrobatic performance of exhibition caliber that you just poop yourself out. Either get thyself to a health food store or get an agent. ●

up your sex frequency

Science has shown that not only is sex good for health, but can also increase your intelligence.

In sex, as in every other aspect of human endeavor, there are giants as well as pygmies. The moment we ask: "How many times a week should a man indulge in sex?" we find that no one answer can be given for all men. Sexually, man does not live and act according to an established rule. One complete sex act every day may be too much for some men, too little for others. Few things are more variable than sex drive and ability in different individuals.

The courts give us some astonishing examples of the truth of this.

One case involved a farmer of the Department de l'Ain, France, who was sentenced to five years in jail because of violence committed against a 90-year-old woman. During the court proceedings it was revealed that the accused, aged 40, had engaged in forcible sexual intercourse twice to five times every day with the woman for a period of over twenty years.

Swiss social workers, reporting on prostitution in Zurich, told a panel of judges that there were several regular "Johns" who were notorious for their fantastic sexual performance. These magnificent studs apparently thought nothing of indulging in intercourse to full completion fifteen to twenty-five times with the same prostitute every week on their "night off." They were all married, and had several children each.

In Manchester, England, a young bookkeeper locked himself in a room with a girl, treated himself to strong wines and exotic foods, and tried to commit suicide by means of excessive intercourse.

After four days of continuous hard grind he lost consciousness, but did not expire.

One learned English nobleman, aged 52, who hit the scandal pages because he had attended certain orgies, was said to be accustomed to making love six times every day and twelve times on Sundays.

An Italian artist made love regularly six times a day, even when he reached the age of sixty. One of his models reported fourteen sexual relationships to orgasm with him during a single night.

Obviously some of these staggering feats may be exaggerated. But it has been demonstrated scientifically that some unusual individuals find it possible to indulge in sexual intercourse a great many times a day and seem to be none the worse for it. In fact, as recent surveys imply, it seems to be of great benefit to them physically and mentally.

Recently a woman patient in Denver, after being treated for frigidity, wrote to a medical journal and said that her husband had 76 sexual intercourse incidents with her. In the following months they had made love several times every day.

Her husband, she reported, attributed his sexual prowess to the fact that, in the two months before their wedding, he had observed complete sexual abstinence. Aged 28, he was a heavy beer-drinker, and also liked to spike his meals with rich spices and so-called aphrodisiac foods.

Meanwhile, the newspapers of Naples reported a rare and eyebrow-raising sex incident. A young couple, just married, were taken to hospital. The young man was 22, his wife 18. She was suffering from severe shock. He was "in a state of exceptional sexual excitation" and, his wife reported, had possessed her continuously for two days and nights.

Even when he had been put to bed several floors away from his wife the young man was still sexually excited, and remained so. Only after four days of treatment with powerful sedatives was he reduced to a normal condition.

One Chicago newspaper published a humorous daily bulletin about The Fireball Honeymoon. When questioned, the young man involved confessed that, until his marriage, he had indulged in sexual relations very rarely because he was so poor financially. He attributed his tremendous physical excitement to this abstinence, which, he said, had "wound me up."

In contrast to these two cases, medical literature is replete with reports of married men between twenty and thirty who never have more than one sexual relationship in an entire month. They are not troubled by this at all, even when they are very strong, virile and in very good health.

Many young men have observed absolute sexual abstinence for many months, and even years. A young math professor told the interviewer for a medical journal that he had coitus with his wife not more than once a year. They were both, he said, "too interested in other fascinating things." He was a normal man, healthy, strong, and happily married.

Yet, according to at least one highly respected source, frequent sex, intelligence and success are inseparable.

If you are getting all the sex you can handle, you are almost certain to be a confident, virile, happy man blessed with far more than average intelligence. You belong to the fortunate minority who are definitely on their way UP in the world.

Who says so?

Other members of the aforementioned minority—the beautiful people with far more intelligence than the average. MENSA, that's who—the international organization of bright, happy and healthy eggheads whose major claim is that they are superior in intelligence to 97% of all the rest of the people on this earth.

MENSA ran a survey recently on its own members living in five different countries, to find out how their sex lives affected their brain power and happiness. Boiled down bluntly, the conclusion was reached that "Men who have sexual intercourse more than five times a week are supremely intelligent. They stand a much better chance of business success than their slower-sex brothers."

More MENSA conclusions:

1. People with a base I.Q. of 120–130 can add 15 points to their brain power by stepping up their sex lives by 10 per cent.

2. Increasing sexual intercourse from four times a week to once a day can raise intelligence levels up to 150—which is borderline genius under accepted testing methods.

3. Regular and frequent sex is beneficial to all ages. It relieves tensions and removes frustrations. As a result, the human brain is free to operate at far higher levels of efficiency.

4. The sex act is a highly charged natural experience which exercises and improves male physical stamina and glandular functions. During the act the male glands pour out adrenalin and hormones, and the motor center of the brain operates at the peak level during a man's entire period of consciousness if he has a regular and frequent sex life.

5. Young men especially should concentrate on maintaining really active sex lives if they wish to reach their personal peak of efficiency both at work and play. Students cramming for examinations should not only sit down with a pile of books—they should lie down frequently with a nubile and experienced playmate.

The MENSA findings tend to be pretty startling when we consider that, until comparatively recently, most books on sex and health were cautiously advising men to have only moderate sexual contact with women if they wished to maintain physical and mental vigor. This advice was especially to be applied between the ages of sixteen and thirty.

Individual differences in sex drive, obviously, make it difficult to apply the MENSA formula of "more than five times a week." Nor can any exact rules be established, such as the ones laid down in the Middle Ages. At that time physicians actually prescribed sex frequency as: "Once a day bad, once a week good, once a month very good."

Almost at the same time, it might be added, the eager Queen of Aragon, by royal decree, assigned six sexual conjunctions a day, and no less, as the normal duty of a husband to his wife.

The waning of virility and fatherhood likewise does not have established periods. Here, too, there are great extremes. While some people, by the time they reach the age of 40, have lost all their sexual ardor and ability, there are others who are still active in their eighties and nineties.

Augustus the Strong, King of Saxony and Poland in the 18th century, has always been considered a staunch supporter of Father's Day. The official records proclaim that he fathered at least 375 children.

Brigham Young was a strong contender on this continent, but there was also Sir William Johnson, a New York trader with the Iroquois before the American Revolution. He traveled among the Indians at a period when they believed that half-white children would be a future tribal asset. He left at least 200 half-white, half-Indian children behind to grow up in the longhouses of the Six Nations.

Fateh Aly Shah, Shah of Persia, fathered some 3,000 children born to the women of his harem. At one time he boasted a mounted bodyguard of 800 men, composed entirely of his sons.

In our own time it is a proven fact that some ninety-year-olds have sex frequently. This is confirmed by a long-term study done among elderly couples at Durham, N.C. According to Dr. Eric Pfeiffer, as high as 60 per cent of the men and women in the 60 to 71-year-old group still had sexual relations twice a week. Eighty per cent of these males were potent, and could easily father a child with a younger woman.

Of those 78 years or older, 20 per cent were still potent and active sexually. The main reason given for stopping sex was the death of the spouse.

An unexpected finding in the study was the rising pattern of sexual activity through the 60's and 70's. Dr. Pfeiffer stated that, when sexual intercourse does stop between a married couple, it is usually because the female has lost interest. The majority of men continue, if they can, into their late nineties, and in rare cases well beyond.

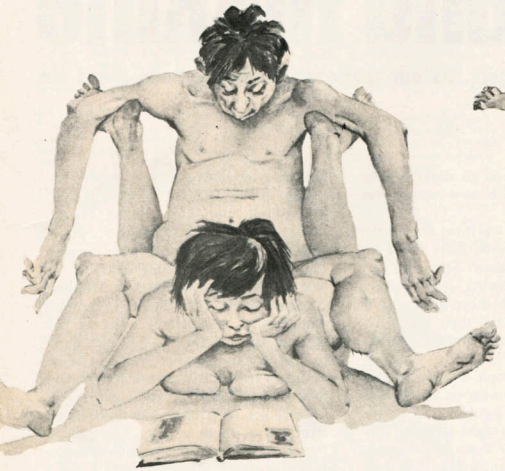
Such studies support the MENSA findings and make a mockery of the old dictum that coitus, and lots of it, "weakens" a man. This fallacy is seen to be even more nonsensical by the fact that some of our most famous boxing champions have been known to indulge in coitus, deliberately, just before an important fight. The reason? It's relaxing. It takes away nervous tension and refreshes the brain.

Golf champions indulge in it for the very same reason. Complete relaxation and lack of tension is highly desirable in championship golf, and sexual intercourse not too long before play proves very effective.

Obviously, the achievement of at least five heterosexual couplings through to climax every week can prove difficult for men who aren't married. Doctors point out, however, that for the purposes stated—expansion of intelligence and a more satisfactory business and social life—other forms of sex relief, such as masturbation, are just as effective. These days the ridiculous stigma attached to self-sex, and the dire consequences alleged to follow, have been thrown out with a distinct sigh of good riddance by eminent authorities.

Five times a week with the sex partner of one's choice may be among a man's future ambitions, but lack of man-woman copulation opportunities should not be allowed to stand in his way. ●

THE MATING GAME



THE MATING GAME is a game we all play, at one time or another, it's just that some people play a better game than others. That's why there are "sex" manuals to help out. ●

SWM INTERVIEW

as told to William Rotsler meet flagg and maxine

Flagg and Maxine are not your "typical" swingers, as our fearless interviewer soon found out.

Flagg is thirty-eight, but looks six or eight years younger. He's a salesman, sometimes household hardware, sometimes industrial items. He likes to move around the country, and rarely stays more than two or three years in any one place. He's blondish, with a healthy, well-muscled body.

Maxine is twenty-six, looks twenty-two when she's blonde and a bit older when she's a brunette. Her own hair is brown. She is quite proud of her figure, and goes three days a week to Jack Lalanne's for workouts.

They are wife-swappers.

They don't call themselves that, because they think it sounds corny, and also inaccurate. If pressed to label themselves, they'd say "swingers." This interview was taped in their large rustic living room in the San Fernando Valley.

WR: Does one of you "swing" more than the other, or do you try to keep it even?
Flagg: Well, we don't keep score, if that is what you mean. We know couples that won't swing unless there's someone for both, but we're not like that. If Max sees someone she wants to go off with, that's cool.
Maxine: Same with him. We sometimes like splitting up, I mean going away with someone else, but he's my man.

WR: Tell me how you go about getting up a scene. With a new couple for instance.
Flagg: Like where we meet them? Ah . . . well, as you know, there are a lot of swinger bars. Explain? The word gets around. "Go to the Swing—lots of action there." So people go there a lot, and if there is action they tell their friends.
WR: Explain "action." Pretend I'm stupider than I am.
Maxine: People. People are action. Not just bodies—not hookers or hustlers or pimps or one-night swingers.
WR: What's a "one-night swinger"?
Maxine: Some joker that's heard about some swinger bar and about swingers and wants to get laid that night.
WR: Excuse my ignorance, but isn't that the idea?
Flagg: Oh, no. At least, not with us. Just getting laid is not it. It's pleasure-seeking, yes. But it's to meet people, attractive people, to know them, to share things and thoughts as well as sexual pleasures.
WR: And a "one-night swinger" is an intrusion?
Maxine: Usually, but sometimes they dig the philosophy behind it and we have a new recruit.
WR: Again, excuse my ignorance, but the reason it's called, or was called, "wife-swapping" is that it indicates trading, or sharing, rather than one guy just getting a lot of free lays.
Flagg: Sometimes it's a girl. It isn't always a guy out alone looking. There's plenty of action for singles. No doubt about it. Lots of people want to play that don't have something to trade.
WR: Okay, tell me how it goes. Maxine?
Maxine: Well, after dinner—sometimes we eat out, sometimes even at the swinger bar—and we usually eat early so we can have a whole evening—we go to one of the bars. We have a drink and look around. After a while you get tc know a lot of people, whether you've swung with them or not. They know people and those people know people. If you're at all attractive—and I don't mean just physically, but in other ways as well, you get a chance to talk to a lot of people. If you find someone that you dig very often his chick or her man will also be attractive to your husband or wife.
WR: Likes attract?
Flagg: Also, Max knows my type, the kind of chick I dig, and she keeps an eye out for one. If something particularly lucious shows up she takes a good look at the man she's with, and, if she thinks she can dig him, we start talking.
WR: You don't just say, "You're attractive, let's ball!"
Flagg: God, no.
Maxine: Usually nothing is said. That is, nothing about balling. You just sort of know when it's time, and you say "Let's go to our place," and off you go. Or maybe you know it will happen, but not that night, and you talk and drink and have a good time.

Flagg: And you go home and wearily ball the old woman. What a bore.

Maxine: That's on the night he can manage to get it up, that is.

WR: Are you two in love—or do you just like each other?

Flagg: Yes.

Maxine: Both. But that doesn't mean other people can't or don't give us pleasure.

Flagg: It would be silly to deny the fact that we are attracted to other people. Damned silly. Whether you do something about it or not is strictly between you and that person—and those you love. I love Max—Max Edelman, runs a deli on Fairfax—and she loves me. Madly, passionately, throws herself in front of bullets twice a week whether she needs it or not. If I went off and screwed some slut with acne and no wit Max here would feel insulted.

Maxine: I'd bash you.

Flagg: But if some four star lovely trips into my bed, Maxine is very proud of me. Her Flagg did that. She's on an ego trip. Bags are always packed, ready to go.

WR: Is it just that—an ego trip that your spouse (there's a word I don't think I've ever said before) is attractive enough to get other attractive people interested?

Maxine: Oh, I think it is a little, if you're honest.

Flagg: But not really. I mean, that's not the big thing. It's really that you are proud of your loved one—or should be—and if she does well at something, why shouldn't you be proud?

WR: Okay, so you've met someone and gone to one or the other's home. What then?

Flagg: What then depends entirely on the people and the moment. Last week I was balling this lady and Max and her husband were playing chess. Last month I sat here talking about Flaubert, for Christ's sake, and all the time you could hear The Screamer here, exercising in the bedroom.

Maxine: It all depends on-the moment, the mood, the people. We've actually come home and just talked. Oh, maybe a little kissing, a little feelie. But mostly talk.

Flagg: The image of swingers just rutting like animals is all wrong. Oh, sure, there are some that just want to fuck all the time, but usually because they have nothing else to talk about.

Maxine: Like that car salesman last week that just told one dirty joke after the other?

Flagg: Yeah. After a while that gets as boring as a two hour conversation of nineteenth century authors. But, the whole idea is pleasure. Pleasure giving, pleasure getting. We got pleasure out of that dumb conversation about Flaubert, and Max likes chess.

WR: After you have seen a couple once, do you meet them again?

Maxine: Perhaps. Usually, yes. If we liked them enough to swing once, we usually like them enough to swing again.

Flagg: We don't often go to the swinger bars on weekends. It's too crowded—too desperate. That's when all the one-nighters hit. So we have our own parties. That's when we invite some couples in to meet other friends of ours. It's also how we meet other couples and other singles, at parties other people throw.

WR: So it isn't all saloon action?

Flagg: Oh, Hell no! Two out of three couples that we dig we meet through other friends, mutual friends. It's really a lot safer that way, too, since that goddamn vice squad thinks it's their god-given right to regulate everything, including adult play.

Maxine: The nicest ones we meet through friends.

WR: What about the big orgies you hear about?

Flagg: We hear about? You hear about any orgies, Max?

WR: I—

Maxine: (Pretending to look through some papers.) Uh, there's the PTA Orgy Thursday next. They want a discussion on sex education for adults. Then there's the Librarian's Third Annual Orgy and Picnic. They're giving away free bookmarks in that shape of Flaubert's cock.

WR: (Sigh.) I asked for that.

Flagg: You're a better man for it.

Maxine: I heard about a big orgy once. I heard it all around me.

Flagg: You? You were at an orgy? Max!

Maxine: You were there, too.

Flagg: Oh, that orgy.

Maxine: An evening of multiple happinesses.

WR: Tell me!

Flagg: He's shouting, Max.

Maxine: He's frustrated. We should introduce him to Claudine.

Flagg: Loose her upon him, don't you mean?

Maxine: And jump back.

Flagg: Yes, you don't want to get goo on your libido.

Maxine: Well, keep your libido in your pants and it won't get gooed on.

Flagg: Right. This has been another Handy Hint brought to you from Wife-Swappers, the Passion People. Remember, at Wife-Swapper, progress is our most important product.

Maxine: That was last year. This season it's Wife-Swappers Have A Better Idea.

WR: You two finished now?

Flagg: Get serious, Max, for god's sake. Sit up straight. Stop picking your nose.

Maxine: Maybe we should introduce Bill to Blind Bessie.

WR: Blind Bessie?

Flagg: Laughs all the way to the bedroom.

WR: And looks like a hyena.

Maxine: Oh, no, she's quite pretty.

WR: Yeah? How'd she get named Blind Bessie? Blind as a bat?

Maxine: No, she just can't see without her glasses. Sweeney gave this big party—I mean big—maybe sixty people. In a dark house. Completely dark.

Flagg: You couldn't see who or what you were groping. Blind Bessie said she didn't find it any different than usual. She can hardly ever see who she's balling, since she takes her glasses off to do it.

WR: But why me, and—

Flagg: Relieve the tensions. Promote the general welfare. Do ordain and establish . . .

WR: Flagg!

Flagg: Yes, sir? You rang?

Maxine: She'd like him.

WR: Blind Bess?

Maxine: Claudine Bergner. She's a swinger. You ought to interview her.

WR: I thought I was interviewing you two.

Flagg: One of us. There's only one of us. I couldn't make it tonight, so I put this shirt on Spot, my dog, and made him sit up here and natter on.

WR: I'll be doggoned, I could have sworn it was you. You better let your pooch take care of your public relations from now on.

Maxine: I usually let my pussy take care of mine.

Flagg: Say the magic word and you get a dollar.

WR: I wonder when this cassette will run out of tape? Or do I detect a hint that you're bored with the whole interview?

Maxine: Oh, no, not at all. It's just that . . .

Flagg: Crystal phoned before you got here. There's a new couple in from Oxnard, and she sounds like my type and he sounds like someone Max would like a lot.

WR: And I'm in the way. C'est la vie.

Maxine: Isn't that the name of the swinger bar in Oxnard that Crystal found the Busbys?

WR: I give up.

Maxine: Come on with us. Get the low-down on the uphighs.

Flagg: Yeah. See the scene of the crime. Swing with the swingers. Relieve your tensions.

WR: I'm not tense.

Maxine: Of course you are. Come on, I'll get my purse.

Flagg: Why don't you meet us there in your car? That way, if you meet someone you can—why don't you turn off that tape recorder and . . . . ●

dr. pendulum answers your questions

As a psychologist, and an experienced swinger, I feel that I may be able to answer some questions, and clear up some misconceptions, concerning sexual styles and attitudes. Whether you are contemplating joining the swinging scene, are currently engaged in swinging, or just have some questions about swinging and your attitudes towards it, I would like to hear from you.

Here are some questions that have been posed to me lately:

Dear Dr. Pendulum:
What is a swinger?
Ann
Boston, Mass.

Dear Ann:
Swingers are a special breed of people—real swingers, that is. Some people think that, just because they make it with a stranger once in a while, they are swinging. Others think that just because they go to a swinging party and get it on they're swinging. But swinging is more of an attitude than it is an action. Swinging is the experiencing of sexual variety on a deliberately casual basis. A swinger approaches people with an open attitude that turns into action when a mutual attraction develops. Even when swingers don't swing, their "open for anything" attitude puts them miles apart from the non-swinger. There are rare exceptions, but, as a rule, being a swinger starts with being a couple. Rarely are unattached single people qualified to be swingers. They invariably look for security, rather than variety, in their sexual activity. The fact that they are promiscuous usually means they haven't found sexual security, not that they aren't looking for it. In order to be a swinger it is necessary to have either a solid relationship (preferably with your mate) outside of the swinging scene, or else have a strong, healthy ego so solid that it does not need the security of a stable relationship.

Dear Dr. Pendulum:
I would like very much to get into swinging. I have brought this subject up many times, but my wife refuses to even consider it. Is there anything I can do?
Joe
New York, N.Y.

Dear Joe:
If all the males who have asked this question were to gather together at one time and place, the crowd would easily fill the Astrodome. First, and most important, don't pressure her. Why not attempt to become friendly socially with some swingers? Strangely enough, some "straight people" (the term swingers use to refer to people who do not swing) feel that swingers are all sex degenerates and freaks. The fact that many professionals, including physicians, teachers, lawyers, judges, nurses, etc., are practicing swingers, and are also well adjusted human beings, never occurs to these "straights." Perhaps meeting some of these nice swingers will relax her. You can probably contact some of them through this magazine, any large city underground newspaper, or check the ads of swinging clubs. You will probably find that you are compatable with some of the letter writers. Answer the letters, and when they respond, explain your situation and ask if they will join you and your wife for dinner, a play, or some such. Whether your first contact is by letter or phone, don't, under any circumstances, lie to them. Tell them that you will not swing the first time out. Swingers, like all other human beings, do not like to be jerked around. Some experienced swingers like to help new couples break the ice. Others hate it, and will never do it for any reason. Make some contacts, and you will quickly find where it's at. In the future, as different questions of this nature are asked, I will give additional suggestions on ways this might be handled. Let me hear from you as to how effective these suggestions were.

Dear Dr. Pendulum:
I am an attractive female in my late twenties. Unfortunately, I am slightly overweight, and although I would like to join the swingers, I wonder if my appearance would be a turn-off.
Joanne
El Paso, Tex.

Dear Joanne:
Beauty is in the eye of the beholder. While Twiggy, and chicks like her, are the rage with some, there are plenty of males who still prefer girls with figures the painter Reubens has made famous. Keep in mind, "it's not what you got, but how well you use it."

Dear Dr. Pendulum:
I'm quite athletic, good build and considered very handsome. I have no trouble balling my wife. However, since starting to swing four months ago, I'm having a lot of difficulty getting hard. This occurs even if the chick is very attractive and someone I think I dig. But, when I come home from one of these fiascos, I can stay hard with my wife for hours. I've been to my doctor, and he has told me there is nothing wrong with me physically.
Bill
Los Angeles, Calif.

Dear Bill:
Yours is not an unusual problem in swinging. Here are some suggestions: (1.) Have a talk with your wife about this. I know the problem is yours, not hers, but, going by other male swingers I have helped who were experiencing your difficulty, the wife's understanding is required if you are going to straighten this out. Sometimes swinging males fail to get hard because they feel their wife will take this as proof of his love. You are probably saying "No, not me." However, if you look at what is happening, it's clear this is one possibility. (2.) Look at your own feelings about swinging. Are you sure you want to be a swinger? Your behavior indicates you may have mixed feelings about it. Again, you may say "No, not me", but I still contend it is another possibility. Think of why you started swinging, and how you felt about it at the time. Could you be reluctant to have your wife involved in it? Could you be fearful of being unable to perform with half a dozen girls at a party? (3.) Another means of handling this difficulty is to seek professional counseling. Sometimes your present difficulty is a warning that there are additional things bugging you. I would like to hear from you again concerning your progress.

This column is for you. I would like to hear from all of you as to what kind of question or subject you would like me to discuss here. Please write me here at Swingers World and tell me what you would like in this column—and especially, send me your questions, or those of your friends.

SWM COLUMN

by Thomas H. Hilton

swinging bartender

From one customer per night to a full house. That's what swingers did for this nightclub.

You know, everybody seems to think that being a bartender is the swinginist job in the world, but believe me, buddy, it just plain ain't true. I worked my tail off for twenty years at Lockheed as an inspector. I used to look for little defects in aluminum parts from four in the afternoon till midnight. At long last I retired. I didn't get no fancy dinner and gold watch like they talk about—I just got out, and I was happy about it.

I'd saved up a little dough, and once I was out of the aircraft racket I figured it was time for me to make a soft nest for myself. I didn't have enough scratch to invest in stocks or bonds and spend what some jerk described as my golden years clipping coupons. I looked at a few small apartment houses, franchises, and all that jazz, but finally settled down to invest my limited capital in this little bar in Hollywood.

It wasn't anything fancy, but it was neat and clean, and I figured that what I could make from it, together with the retirement check, should take care of me. I came into the joint early in the mornings and did my own janitor work. At first I pulled a double shift every day, and had hopes of building it up to where I could afford a night man to work the bar.

The longer I worked the joint, the further away that happy day seemed to get when I could afford to hire another whisky-pourer. I dug into my savings to put a new front on the joint and new carpet on the floor, but nothing seemed to help business. I asked the liquor salesmen where I was missing the boat. Most of 'em just smiled and sold me another case of booze. But then there was Tony. He seemed to take an interest in my problems and the place.

"What you need, George, is a gimmick. There are places all up and down the avenue selling the same booze for the same price. The only thing that'll make people come to one saloon instead of another is a gimmick."

I knew that he was right, but I couldn't seem to find the key. I tried a Happy Hour, half-priced drinks for the girls, and all of the old tricks. I even started serving free hot dogs at the bar, but the income hovered just above the break-even point. At last I reached the point where I decided that the bar business wasn't for me. All this was before that fateful Thursday night.

All the signs pointed to it being just another nothing evening. I was standing behind an empty bar, polishing glasses for want of anything better to do. It was almost seven-thirty, and my cocktail hour crowd had consisted of three beer drinkers who had just left. The place was so quiet I had just shoved a red quarter in the jukebox and pushed the buttons for some old Glenn Miller records. That was before they arrived, changing everything.

Have you ever had the experience of looking at total strangers but, in some strange way, knowing that they were going to be really important to you? Well, that's the way it was when I first looked across the bar at Harry and Elsie. Before they had finished their first drink I set up a refill on the house; something I very seldom do. I didn't want them to leave. Elsie was fascinated with my collection of Jim Beam pottery decanters on the back bar. I explained that they were real collector's items. They looked around the place like they were planning on buying it, or something. Every now and then they made little comments to each other which escaped me. They seemed especially intrigued by the high ceiling.

"What's with all the rope up there?" Harry asked. "Looks like it was left over from a hanging party."

I explained how the guy I bought it from used to have a Gay 90's hang-up. The ropes were for a red velvet swing. In more affluent times he had a near-naked girl swinging back and forth over the customers' heads.

"What could be more appropriate for a swinging bar?" They exclaimed, and Harry asked me how I'd like to have customers packed in every night. "This area is really ripe for a real nice bar where couples and stags who want to swing can come looking for action and know they'll encounter others of similar views. That old swing is the perfect gimmick."

Harry really got wound up in his subject. He explained that he had a small advertising agency. He pulled a pad from his pocket and started making some notes on ideas. Elsie contributed a few like "Come to the Bar Where Everything and Everybody Swings."

The next morning I got a ladder and the vacuum cleaner and got the dust off the old red velvet swing. That night they came in again, bringing two other couples with them. If Elsie had impressed me as attractive last night, tonight she completely galvanized me. There is something about a tall shapely blonde wearing white satin that turns my burner on high. I wondered what she saw in short, balding Harry.

Their friends, Sally and Ben, were a sharp couple in their late twenties. She was petite, except in the area around her lungs, where she was anything but small. Her tight blouse left no doubt that she had actively joined the "Ban the Bra" movement. Her hair, with the obvious help of a henna rinse, was auburn. There was something about the way she looked at a guy with those mammoth cornflower blue eyes that made him check to see if he was unzipped.

Her husband, Ben, was tall and athletic looking. He had more the appearance of a professional tennis player than of a man who made his living developing and selling advertising novelties and printed specialties.

The third couple, Helen and Jack, were older than their friends. I guessed they were somewhere between thirty-five and forty. Helen had olive skin, raven black hair which she wore shoulder length and flashing dark eyes. She had an attractive little accent that might have been Brazilian or Argentinian. She had no great shakes of a figure, and was hardly the image of a modern swinger. Jack was even less so. He was at least fifty pounds overweight, and his breathing came in little asthmatic gasps. His business card explained that he made neon signs. All three of the men carried briefcases, and it was soon evident that this was not purely a social meeting.

I came around the bar to rearrange the stools comfortably under the only properly illuminated area. As they seated themselves both Elsie's and Sally's bodies grazed against my upper arms. Suddenly I felt like someone had emptied a scuttle of red hot coals down my trousers. When the drinks were served the guys opened their cases. I could hardly believe the artists' sketches they produced. All three must have devoted their entire day to the promotion of my bar. Harry had a half-dozen advertising layouts, which left no doubts as to the type of clientele he wished to attract. The first ads would appear in the Hollywood Free-Press and two other underground papers. Later he had plans for ads in a national magazine catering to swingers. Jack produced a full-color rendering of a new front, with a lifesize neon outline of a nude girl on a swing that would swing back and forth across the front of the bar.

It was Ben who really produced the overflowing bag of tricks. He had a prototype of a smart-looking book of matches. On the cover was the same swinging girl as on the sign. Inside there was a small questionnaire, with spaces to be filled in giving name, address, phone number and when. There were blotter-like coasters for the bar with the same insignia. These were red on one side, green on the other. He explained that those people who were immediately available to swing could so indicate by leaving the green side up. Those who wished to plan for the future would have the red side up. Information inside the matchbook cover would be self-explanatory when found in the pocket the next day. He demonstrated that the cover was perforated right above the striker. It could be torn off, and was then the size of a business card.

For the steady customers the bar would provide a little plastic filebox, in which to keep this private file of names and numbers.

A quick deal was made, and before the night was over I had acquired three partners, each with 5% in exchange for his particular services and products. I offered a couple of bottles of champagne, in order that we might drink to our future success. Elsie and Harry had a better suggestion: that we all go to their house and swing, rather than swig to luck. I remembered that my wife, Melba, had gone to her sister's for a few days. I felt like a fifth wheel, but they told me that I was being silly and that this wasn't the way the game was played. There did not necessarily have to be an equal number of players of both sexes.

At closing time I rode with Elsie and Harry and left my car behind the bar. Tomorrow was Saturday, and everyone wanted to come in and make plans for redecoration and the like. We drove out the Ventura Freeway to the hills of Encino. I was impressed with their home. It was more like an estate, with a huge pool and all of the symbols of wealth. My new partner obviously did very well at advertising.

Saturday morning, back at the bar, Harry produced a "Closed For Remodeling" sign and tacked it to the front door. Jack took measurements for the new neon front. Ben was on the phone calling painters, bar supply houses and a carpet contractor. The girls checked around, making long lists of things to be done. My dead little bar had become a veritable inferno of frenzied activity. Harry had the advertising manager of the Free-Press over and gave him the copy for two weeks of ads announcing our grand opening. I looked about me at my new friends. It seemed inconceivable that forty-eight hours ago I didn't know that these people existed. Never had I felt closer to six other humans. I dislike trite expressions, but we were like one big, happy family. Perhaps that is the very key to the underlying joy of a swinging group. After all, after last night, we were now all partners in a lot more than just a business venture.

For the next two weeks we all worked virtually around the clock. My crummy little bar began to look quite posh indeed. We were all too busy and too tired to have a repeat of our initial swinging session. I knew that the boys had spent a hell of a lot of money. I hoped that they knew what they were doing. They were thrilling days, but the highlight came when, several days before the scheduled opening, the custom-made swing was installed. A little electric hoist allowed the girl to get it and raise or lower herself without a ladder. The girls all wanted to try it out, so when the workmen left we locked the doors. One after the other they peeled off their clothes and swung nude above us, thoroughly exposed to our admiring view through the transparent seat. If it had the effect on our customers that it had on us, our success was assured. Tired as we all were, we had a little preview swinging party in the booths and on the barstools.

We were all in high spirits, emotionally as well as sexually. I was so thrilled with the good fortune that had befallen my business, and the new thrills that had come into my fading sex life, I wanted to celebrate and to have my friends share this with me. After all, I was the bartender in the group. What better way to toast our success and launch our new venture than to invent a new drink and dedicate it to the revitalized establishment.

Any bar has a certain amount of dead stock, and mine was no different. I had read how one bar owner was stuck with a case of Kahlua. Since it was a real dog item, and vodka was the prime mover, he poured Kahlua and vodka together and gave birth to the "Black Russian." With this thought as an inspiration, I dug behind the bar. I discovered a dust-covered bottle of banana liqueur and a part of a bottle of Creme de Cacao. I mixed equal parts of each of these with two parts scotch, and christened the result The Velvet Swing.

The mixture turned out to be smooth and lovely. My partners seemed to enjoy it, and it put the final cap on a delightful evening. I thought it was only because we were physically exhausted and sexually satiated. It was Harry, the promoter in our group, who suggested that we make The Velvet Swing a specialty of the house. He must have been right, because, in the months ahead, I amazed the liquor salesmen by ordering Banana Liqueur and Creme de Cacao by the case. This silly concoction of back-bar left-overs became our trademark. Now other bartenders up and down the boulevard call to ask for the recipe because their customers are asking for it!

Well, that's the way it all started. "The Velvet Swing" was an instant success, and has been ever since. In our first week we took in more money than I had made in the first year as "The Velvet Room." Even though I can afford all the help in the world now, I still like to work a full shift every night.

I never cease to be amazed at some of the unlikely types who come in looking for action. It's a study in human psychology. People, like books, can't always be judged by their covers. My wife and I have swung with lots of them. Most have big fancy homes or luxurious apartments. There's one little gray-haired couple in their sixties or seventies. They love to host parties for swingers they meet here. They can't keep up with their younger guests, but they sure give it one hell of a try. We have a couple of well-known movie stars who are regulars, and a bunch of unknowns who look like movie stars. Swingers are a very democratic group, and the haves don't mind hosting the have-nots. Bring the wife or girl-friend in some night when you're in the neighborhood. You'll meet some darned nice people. ●

swinging travel

What better way to spend a weekend than to go to a fascinating place like Jamaica with nine other swinging couples? That's just what my old man, Tom, and I did, and it was one of the most unusual sexperiences either one of us have ever had.

We arranged to meet the other couples at a hotel in Miami the night before we departed. There were couples from all over the U.S. (New York, Texas, Minnesota, Louisiana, Oregon, Nevada, Illinois, Florida; we represented California). Even though we had many differences, the thing we had in common was that we were all swingers in the true sense of the word—people who were not bored with their relationships and marriages, but who did enjoy meeting and having fun with groups of compatible couples. People who enjoyed taking off their clothes and their inhibitions.

The couples in our group were such open, uninhibited people. There seemed to be no tension among us, as there often is in regular cocktail social cliques where everyone is competing for attention. There was no mink coat, diamond ring flaunting among the women, or deal comparing among the men. The men did not find it necessary to discuss their sexual explotations and fantasies, since everything was out in the open and their fantasies had been actualized. With most of our social and sexual hangups out of the way we had time to concentrate on the important things such as warmth, understanding and mutual interests.

The next morning we met at the airport and boarded the plane for Jamaica. It was a beautiful flight over the Caribbean. We landed in Montego Bay two hours later, and were immediately handed a delicious rum drink by beautiful honey brown Jamaican girls.

We had been warned that the cab driver would not only try to overcharge us, but scare us to death with his daredevil driving, but we hadn't expected quite such a terror-filled ride. After we checked into the hotel we went for a bus tour around the island. During the tour we stopped several times at small shops for souvenirs and still more complementary rum drinks. The combination of rum, the warm tropical weather and the beautiful green countryside made me feel very warm and loving, and I could feel my nipples becoming hard and my vagina getting wet. I reached over and put my hand between Tom's legs. As my fingers walked up and down his soft prick it raised its head in response, but I noticed that Tom seemed much more interested in the beautifully sexy Jamaican hostess as she undulated up and down the aisle of the bus. She brushed up against Tom as she passed by us, and Tom's prick jumped up to grab her. They were obviously turned on to each other, so Tom invited her to join us for *cock*tails later in the evening.

Back at the hotel some of us gathered in one of our rooms to get better acquainted. My vagina ached for a prick, and I started undressing one of the men. First, I took off his tight body shirt to reveal the hairiest chest I had ever seen. I slowly ran my hands through his hair, and then, by impulse, I unzipped his pants and grabbed a handful of that hair. His prick was as hard as a cucumber and just as bland as I devoured it. He tore my clothes off and exploded inside my wet, hungry cunt. I couldn't get enough of his stiff prick as it plunged deeper and deeper inside me. I screamed in agony for more! More! Suddenly there were hands grabbing my breasts, and wet lips sucking my lips. I opened my eyes to find another man hovering over me. While I was being balled by the first one the second man continued to kiss my lips and breasts, and when the first one came and his soft prick fell out of my cunt the other hard one was thrust inside my still hungry cunt. By this time everyone was getting hard and wet and an orgy started with three and four people going at the same time and no hole or mouth empty.

I took a walk down to the beach while the others took a nap. I didn't want to miss one minute of this beautiful place. A fine specimen of a man approached me as I rested on the beach, recuperating. He asked me if I would like to go for a sail on his catamaran. While we were adrift on the beautiful pink and purple shaded ocean this beautiful black man with rippling muscles decided he wanted more than a boat ride. I took one look at his massive thighs and agreed. After we tied up the boat we hopped on his motorcycle and took a ride to the other side of the island, stopping for beer at a little stand along the way. We found a private nude beach, where we joined the fashion show. It didn't take much of that strong beer and the sight of all those beautifully nude bodies before we were balling. Wow!

Back at the hotel again, everyone was in an uproar. There was water streaming from one of our rooms. It seemed as though eight people had decided to take a bath together, and had forgotten to turn off the water!

That evening the electricity went out at the hotel and we all ate dinner by candlelight. The hostess we had invited arrived for after-dinner drinks with a darling oriental man. We all decided to go nightclubing, and they made excellent guides. The first club was a dark, sexy, stag bar where the local studs picked up girls. The next place was a loud, rocking scene with many interracial couples. After drinking and dancing for several hours we decided to go for a ride. By this time Tom was totally wrapped up with the Jamacian girl and I was really digging the oriental guy. He invited us to his place overlooking the ocean. The water looked so inviting that we took a walk along the beach. It was a quiet, secluded beach, and we took off our clothes and swam far out into the ocean together. By the time we made it back to the shore we were so exhausted we collapsed on the beach in a huddle. It began to get chilly, and we bundled up in a blanket, covering even our heads. We were holding each other close, and the warmth made me drowsy. I dozed off several times, only to be awakened by either a stiff prick in my vagina or wet lips on my cunt.

We spent the night at the beach, and by the time we got back to the hotel we were pretty worn out. Tom and I spent the entire afternoon by the pool. While we were relaxing we heard some people talking about the crazy people in that "swinging" group. It seems that some of our group had gotten so bombed the night before that they had put some lounge chairs on the bottom of the pool and sat on them until someone pulled them out!

That night we found a beach party. There were campfires blazing all over the beach and beautifully coordinated natives doing the Limbo. It was an exciting scene to watch, and even more exciting when I tried it myself. I arched my back again and again until I couldn't make it under the bar anymore. After the natives left the scene we made up our own version of the Limbo. We stripped and tied a string to the men's pricks as they tried to make it under the Limbo bar. Of course, this stimulation made their pricks hard, which interfered with their performance since their pricks would contact the bar and disqualify them. Then, of course, the girls had the fun of taking care of the hard pricks as we watched the other performers. Just the sight of nude girls arching their backs and thrusting their vaginas in the air as they wiggled their bodies under the bar turned most of the men on. More than once there was a hard prick waiting for the successful girl as she made it under the bar. What a nice prize!

The trip had been so full of exciting sexperiences that it seemed as though a week had passed instead of a weekend. I loved the free spirited Jamaican people, and I would miss the beautiful countryside, but I knew there would be many more great times ahead of me now that I knew what turned me on and was not afraid of trying new things and people. On the plane back to Los Angeles I was already planning for the next trip, a three day weekend cruise to Mexico with twenty other couples! ●

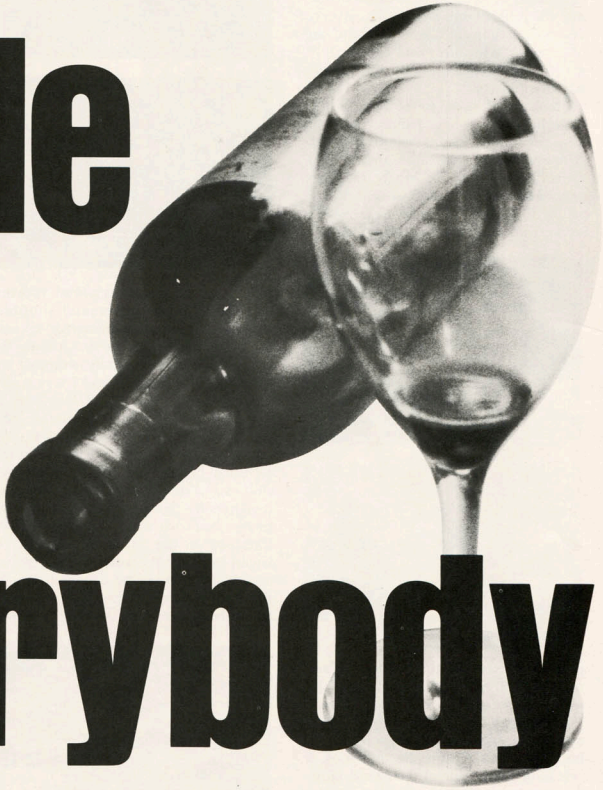
Americans are rapidly discovering what Europeans have known for years. That wine, the right wine, can add greatly to the enjoyment of any meal. For maximum enjoyment, though, you need to know what wine is the "right" wine.

a wine guide for everybody



Bill Rotsler, bon vivant and man-about-town, enjoys a good glass of wine (or four) before, during and after his meals. As such, he is able to judge and recommend wines for the non-connoisseur. Don Pfeil, on the other hand, is a lover of fine wines, for wines sake, and because of this his opinions are often sharply divergent from those of Mr. Rotsler. For your edification, we hereby present the opinions of both.

BILL ROTSLER

This guide is designed for the man or woman who simply wants to serve the right sort of wine at the proper time in the correct fashion. Reading this will not turn you into a wine snob, and certainly will not make you into a true connoisseur. But, if you are simply afraid of "getting into the wine scene" because it seems too complicated, too esoteric, then this is the guide for you.

The study of wines is a complicated and quite large field, but the basics are quite simple. Learn them, and you can serve wine for any occasion without being embarrassed that you might do something stupid or gauche. This guide should give you confidence, and if you have been reluctant to embark upon such an adventure before, this might open the winecellar door to great pleasure.

First of all, let us dispell the feeling that if you deviate one dot from some mysterious ironclad rule you will be frowned upon and cast out into a world where they serve only Ripple, and your friends will classify you among winos and perverts.

DON PFEIL

The rules are there for a reason, and if you, Mr. Rotsler, deviate from them in my presence, I will personally cast you out into the darkness, with your bottle of Ripple, to live forever after with the winos and perverts.

BILL ROTSLER

To continue, after that unfortunate interruption, if you want to drink a certain type of wine with a certain food, then do so. But, remember that people have been drinking wine for thousands of years, and there are certain guidelines that have evolved which seem to be for the most pleasing of combinations. When in doubt, follow the rules. Later on you can make up your own. Remember, the only criteria is your own taste.

DON PFEIL

We can assume that the reader has taste. About you, I'm not so sure.

BILL ROTSLER

Wine may be enjoyed at any time, but generally falls into three areas: before, during and after meals. Let us discuss them in that light.

Before dinner. Many people prefer wine to the "traditional" cocktail before dinner, since wine does not blunt the senses in the manner of stronger alcoholic drinks. Since one of life's more delightful pleasures is witty and interesting dinner conversation, one should not partake of that which will dull the wits, much less the senses needed to enjoy the meal.

Any sort of drink should have as its goal a sort of light euphoria, a sense of pleasure and well-being on the part of the drinker. You should not drink wine to get drunk, but for pleasure. The mind should stay alert, so wine should be sipped and savored.

Before-dinner wines are called aperitifs (ah-pear-ah-teef), and probably the best known is sherry. Sherry is an excellent cooking wine and a favorite choice of many for before-dinner drinking. There is a wide selection in the sherries, from very dry to very rich. The fino sherries are pale, dry and light. The full, rich and sweet oloroso sherries are generally darker in color. The cream or "cocktail" sherries are excellent before dinner, as they are very pleasing to the palate and seem to excite the taste buds.

Champagne is also an excellent aperitif, and one that is certain to please your guests. Movies, books and giggling girls have made champagne something special, more celebrated than any other wine. An ordinary $3 or $5 bottle of domestic champagne makes a before dinner drink a party. Do not make the mistake of thinking only the French can produce good champagnes. There are some brut (broot), that is, dry, and sec (seck), sweeter, champagnes, made in this country which are excellent. Again, the wine you select should be one which you—or your guests—like. Invest a few dollars, get one of each, and try them at the same time to decide which pleases you most. There is something about bringing out a bottle of champagne when you have a lady guest that makes it a special occasion, so you might keep some in your refrigerator or wine rack.

DON PFEIL

In general, I am in complete agreement. Sherries, especially the cream sherries, make excellent before-dinner drinks. As for the champagnes, I would go further, saying that the better domestic champagnes, especially those from upstate New York, are superior to most French champagnes, which do not travel well. However, I would be more inclined to consider champagne a dessert wine.

If you desire a sparkling wine as a before-dinner drink, I would suggest a cold duck, which is a blend of a sparkling white wine (champagne) and a still red wine (burgundy). Served ice-cold, along with cold sliced fruit such as apple and orange bits, they make an excellent appetizer.

BILL ROTSLER

Dinner. The main course is the key to the selection of the dinner wine, especially for meat dishes. Here is where the most well-known "rules" surface: red wines with beef and other red meats, and white wines with white meats, seafood and fowl. These rules evolved because some red wines taste sour when served with fish, and some wines can easily overpower certain delicate dishes.

The dinner wine should be dry, no matter what color it is. There are those who like sweet wines with main dishes, but most people seem to find them a little too much.

For red meats and game a perfect choice would be a Burgundy or a Bordeaux (bore-dough). Game meats are generally strongly flavored in themselves and a good wine selection would be a domestic Hearty Burgundy or an imported Chateauneuf-du-Pape (sha-toe-nuf-doo-pop). Other red meats go well with a lighter Burgundy, such as the fruity Beaujolais (bow-zhow-lay) or the superb Cabernet Sauvignon (cab-air-nay-so-veen-yon). Perhaps the least expensive you could buy this wine would be $2.50 or $3, although they command prices to twenty dollars and more.

DON PFEIL

I consider a hearty Burgundy to be much too sweet for a meat dish. In domestic wines I would recommend a mountain-grape wine, such as the Cabernet mentioned above, a dry Zinfandel, or a Pinot Noir. A good, dry Burgundy is, of course, always a good all-round wine for a meat dish.

In the imported wines, a good Bordeaux or St. Emilion with steaks and roasts, and a Margeaux or Pinot Noir with game or strongly flavored meats is excellent. I would hold the Beaujolais for lightly flavored or relatively bland meats, where the taste of the wine can be used to contrast to the taste of the main course.

While I have the floor for the moment, it might be well for us to explain, briefly, the difference between a dry and a sweet, a red and a white, wine. The only principle difference between a red and white wine is that, in the red wines, the skin of the grape is left on. It is removed in the process

NUDIST CAMP LAW UNCONSTITUTIONAL

LOS ANGELES—County officials are expected to petition the Court of Appeal for a rehearing on a ruling declaring the county licensing law for nudist camps unconstitutional.

The Second District Court of Appeal's Division 3 ruled 2-1 that the county regulation was a violation of the First Amendment.

County attorneys described the decision favoring Elysian Fields and Sandstone Center, two Topanga Canyon area nudist camps, as a ruling that "operating a nudist camp is an exercise of the right of "free speech."

But attorney Stanley Fleishman of Hollywood, whose firm represented the two nudist camps, indicated he felt the freedom of assembly provision of the First Amendment was the one applied.

"This was an important decision," Fleishman said. "It held the First Amendment protection of the right of association includes people who choose to associate in the nude just as it protects some people who choose to associate dressed in religious costume.

"The licensing law was an unconstitutional attempt to interfere with this association. It was unconstitutionally broad and unconstitutionally vague."

Fleishman said the case has been in the courts for two years after both the nudist camps decided to challenge the county ordinance that would require them to pay a $10 a year license fee, contending such licensing would impose illegal county controls over their operations.

Law Challenged

Elysian Fields, Fleishman said, did not apply for the license and decided to challenge the law directly. Sandstone Center did apply, was turned down and then challenged the law.

Criminal cases against both camps were filed by the county in Malibu Justice Court.

"We attacked the ordinance first at that level," Fleishman said, "but the judge in that court overruled our demur and set the case for trial. We then filed for a superior court writ to prohibit the Malibu court from going ahead with the trial and Superior Judge Delbert E. Wong ruled against us."

The case was then carried to the Court of Appeal where Justices

JUDGE SAYS "NO!"

LOS ANGELES—Superior Judge L. Thaxton Hanson Wednesday in his Van Nuys court again defied a federal court order to release 13,500 reels of sex films to their owners.

He charged that the three-judge federal panel, in issuing its order for return of the movies, was in violation of a "judicial doctrine of abstention and comity (mutual consideration)."

But he also had oblique criticism for the federal judges' order itself.

"This country," he said, "appears frozen to an accelerating treadmill of ever-increasing permissiveness all fostered under the guise of newfound and expanded constitutional rights.

"Since the current flood of erotica began in the early 1960s," he went on, "sex crimes have multiplied . . . and the treadmill to which we seem affixed could dump this once great and proud country into the junk heap of history, to join the debris of ancient Rome."

In defying the order, Hanson may have risked being held in contempt of the U.S. court, according to some observers.

The federal panel of judges is scheduled to hear a report Friday from the offices of the city attorney, county counsel and district attorney on their progress in effecting release of the films.

Hanson's action Wednesday was in response to a request from Dep. City Atty. David Schacter that the judge vacate his order confiscating the films.

The reels were seized in police raids Dec. 29 and Jan. 12 at five distributing companies, which then appealed to the federal panel of Judges Irving Hill, Jesse Curtis and Walter Ely.

The U.S. jurists, on Feb. 22, noted that no one was under arrest and ordered the films returned to the producers and distributors on grounds that the legality of the raids was open to question.

On March 17, three men were arrested in the case and booked on charges of conspiracy to distribute obscene material.

Hanson Wednesday cited the arrest of the three men as an additional reason for his refusal to release the films.

NUDE BEACH BUSTED

SANTA BARBARA—Following the report published in ADAM Magazine regarding California's nude beaches, the Sheriff's Department in Santa Barbara launched a crackdown on the increasing number of nude bathers frequenting one of the isolated stretches of sand just south of this Southern California city.

A spokesman for the department stated that 48 persons were cited in a 7 day period for indecent exposure and disturbing the peace. Most of the arrests occurred during the weekend, when the crackdown began with the permission of Santa Barbara District Attorney David Minier.

Minier said the beach had become a popular spot for "hundreds of people." He went on to state that many of these people were coming

HONOLULU APES NEED SEX MANUAL—BADLY!

HONOLULU—Despite the recent interest in sex education, no one has come to the aid of the gorilla who doesn't know and isn't even interested enough to ask. Jack Throp, director of the Honolulu Zoo, is patiently trying to lure Congo or Cameroun, an inept pair of males, to the bedchamber of the zoo's 16-year-old virgin, Fifi.

Throp said Congo and Cameroun get very excited when Fifi's mating times rolls around but express their interest by thumping tubs and wrestling each other.

"Our males haven't read the book and they haven't had anybody to watch," Throp explained. "Sex is very low-key with gorillas and the drive to explore is not strong."

The chaste behavior prevailing in the gorilla cage has nothing to do with Fifi's lack of allure, Throp contended. "I can only speak for myself—and not our male gorillas—but I don't find her unattractive at all," he said.

"Fifi has a rather intelligent face—a gentle face."

Fifi vacated her home in the Seattle zoo last spring hoping for an Hawaiian honeymoon. The gorillas share a cage on Waikiki, complete with moonlit tropical nights and gentle sea breezes whispering in the palm trees, a setting calculated to raise any lover's pulse.

Any lover but a gorilla.

"It's a slow learning process," Throp said.

"How long?

"I should think there will be active mating going on in three or four months. . . . It depends.

"But with spring in the air, it should help."

to the beach from other parts of the state, and that the situation had gotten completely out of hand, since Santa Barbara had become something of a "Southern California mecca for nude bathers."

Officials said 60% of the individuals cited were from the Los Angeles area. It was revealed that, among those cited, there were teachers, a priest, the vice president of a major airline and a Los Angeles County deputy district attorney.

DOCTOR FINALLY NOTICES —LOVE IS NECESSARY

LOS ANGELES—Dr. John C. Cassel, head of the department of epidemiology at the University of North Carolina school of public health, has stated that the prevention of disease depends as much on the psychological and social climate, how well a person is loved, as it does on things like diet and housing.

Dr. Cassel pointed out that there was a recent study to learn the number of complications that occurred in 200 women giving birth to their first baby. The study showed that women who had undergone many recent social readjustments in addition to pregnancy had a 90% chance of a complication if they had little warm social support by their husbands and families.

If they were well loved—even though they had had many recent social readjustments—the complication rate was only 30%.

The lack of warm social interrelations can result in marked alterations in hormone levels and nervous system changes which increase susceptibility to disease, according to Cassel. Which disease the individual gets depends on diet, the presence or absence of certain germs and many other factors, he stated.

Cassel said that some physicians do not believe that there is such a thing as general susceptibility to disease, but, "if there is no such thing I'd find it hard to explain why divorced men have a death rate 3 to 5 times higher than married men of the same age," he said. "Generalized susceptibility," he went on, "also explains why the parts of the United States which have the highest heart disease rates (all large cities) also have the highest rates for cancer, strokes and so on. They have a susceptibility to dying."

Dr. Thomas H. Holmes III, professor of psychiatry at the University of Washington, has studied the relationship between social readjustments and illness susceptibility.

He found that change, whether pleasant like getting married or sad like divorce, is a powerful factor associated with illness.

He has devised a rating scale that gives points to a list of 43 common life changes such as a death of a spouse (100) points) divorce (73), retirement (45), sex difficulties (39), change in work hours (20), change in sleeping habits (16), vacation (13), and minor violations of the law (11).

A person who accumulates 800 points within one year has an 80% chance of having a major health change, he said.

"ON – OFF" VASECTOMY

DETROIT—A new procedure that will enable doctors to sterilize women in a 10 or 15-minute office operation and a tiny faucet-type valve to make vasectomies reversible were reported here Thursday.

Dr. Clifford R. Wheelus, a Johns Hopkins University gynecologist, said instruments making possible fast and simple female sterilization were being developed that would fit in an attache case for carrying to rural areas and less developed countries.

Dr. Joseph E. Davis, a New York medical college urologist, described a mechanical device to turn a vasectomy "on" or "off," thus allowing alternating periods of sterility or fertility.

To change from on to off and vice verse requires a surgical procedure, however.

Wheelus and Davis addressed the 10th annual meeting of the American Assn. of Planned Parenthood physicians. More than 300 birth-control and population-education authorities are gathered to hear reports on contraception, abortion and sterilization. The meeting is sponsored by Planned Parenthood-World Population.

Dr. Wheelus said his female sterilization procedure would cost about $125, a sharp drop from present costs because the need for hospitalization would be eliminated.

His procedure is a modification of laparascopy—making an incision in the abdomen and inserting an instrument to close off the fallopian tubes by electro-cauterizing them.

The Johns Hopkins group has made it an outpatient procedure by eliminating the need for general anesthesia. This was accomplished by using an instrument (operating laparoscope) that requires only a single incision rather than the customary two.

The instrument is inserted into the incision which is about the diameter of a finger. It has a light to enable the doctor to locate the fallopian tubes.

Wheelus said 500 procedures had been done using local anesthesia in Maryland, Nepal and El Salvador and the method soon will be tried in Puerto Rico.

In addition, a New York firm is developing a new laparoscope that applies a clip around the fallopian tubes rather than cauterizing them.

The gynecologist said this experimental instrument had been used in 15 or 20 cases.

"I think very shortly we will have female sterilization down to a 10 or 15-minute operation under local anesthesia with all the equipment necessary packed into an attache case," he said.

Dr. Davis, who is president of the Assn. for Voluntary Sterilization, said the tiny valve for vasectomies developed at New York Medical College is permanently implanted in the sperm-carrying tube.

The device is called Bionyx Control. It is not available for general use but could be ready for mass screening tests in the near future, Davis said. ●

James A. Cobey, who wrote the decision, and Harold Wilton Schweitzer ruled against the county ordinance. Justice John R. Allport dissented.

Meanwhile, county officials said, no additional enforcements actions were taken against the two nudist camps which continue to operate.

Edward H. Gaylord, chief of the county counsel's special services division which handled the case for the county, said the appellate ruling, if it stands, means that if the county decides to keep a nudist camp licensing law it will be required to grant such licenses as long as the camp is in the right zone, building codes and fire codes have been complied with and no untruthful statement is made in the application for the license.

"Grounds for denying a license that do not affect free speech are much stricter," Gaylord noted, "and that is the type of licensing law the county adopted for nudist camps after our law banning them was ruled invalid.

"Under the ordinance we could deny the license if the applicant was intemperate, if he was conducting a nuisance or if a similar license had been denied before or revoked.

Objections Cited

"But I think the objections of the camps also included the revocation proceedings called for in the ordinance as well as the requirement to consent to the sheriff entering the place of business to see if it was complying."

Gaylord indicated the county was anything but happy about this latest setback in its efforts to control nudism and said, "I think we definitely will ask for a rehearing because the decision was 2-to-1. If that fails we can try for a hearing in the State Supreme Court, but, frankly, we are not optimistic when we take a case of this type to that court and I doubt if the United States Supreme Court would consider hearing the case if we had to carry our appeal that far.

HIS MOST EROTIC EXPERIENCE

Some people seem to be lucky in everything they do, and some people are unlucky. Some people have a natural talent for some things, and some people have no talent at all—for anything. By saying this I'm not trying to make some sort of deep philosophical statement or anything. I'm just leading up to the why and how of what turned out to be my most erotic experience. That was what you asked me for, wasn't it?

Some things happen to people, over and over again, for no known reason. They just do. With me, it's that every chick I latch on to at our friendly neighborhood swinger's club is a wierdo. Susan, my wife, doesn't seem to have this sort of problem. Nor do any of the other members. Just me.

While this sometimes leads to some pretty fun-type evenings, it can get to be a drag after a while. I mean, after ending up in bed with chicks who dig only oral sex, chicks who get turned on only if you suck their big toe for ten minutes first, one chick who had to read comic books while she was doing it or she couldn't climax, and so on, I began to get hungry for a normal chick who was looking for normal sex.

That's the kind of mood I was in one Friday night when Susan and I went to a party at the Huston's, new members of our club. When we got there the party was in full swing, and, as we always do, Susan and I split up, her to look for a man, me to look for a chick. Hopefully one who wasn't too screwed up in the head.

It didn't take me long to spot the sharpest woman in the place. She turned out to be Mrs. Huston, Anita Huston, and, much to my surprise, I didn't have much trouble seperating her from the crowd of men who had her pinned in a corner. I led her away from the crowd in the living room, into the family room, and just as I was about to suggest a dance or something she pulled away from me.

"You'll find everything you need for drinks over there at the bar," she said. "Excuse me for just a minute. I want to show you something."

I mixed us a pair of drinks, a mild one for me and a somewhat stronger one for her, then sat down to wait. After a few minutes I became impatient, though, and after closing the door to the living room—closing out the noise of the party—I walked over to the stereo that filled one whole wall and picked out and put on the turntable some soft and romantic music. By the time I had the records playing I'd finished my drink, so I mixed myself another one and sat down to wait some more.

Fifteen endless minutes went by with no sign of her, so I decided to go looking. I recalled one chick who asked to be excused for a minute, then came back half-an-hour later, madder than hell. She had been waiting for me to take the hint and follow her—to bed!

A hallway led off the family room, lined with closed doors, and I couldn't hear anything so I walked back along the hall, finally seeing one door slightly open, with a small amount of light spilling through the crack. I pushed it open a little bit to look in, and when I did she looked up at me.

"Come on in and relax. I'll be through in a moment." She was sitting, I thought, in the biggest bathtub I had ever seen. Then I realized she wasn't sitting. She was standing! The tub was more like an indoor pool. A good fifteen feet long by ten feet wide, and, judging from the amount of her that was showing above the surface, between four and five feet deep.

Her body, what I could see of it, was magnificent, and created a case of instant hard-on. Not waiting for an invitation, I quickly stripped off my clothes and slid into the tub, which was filled with warm-but-not-hot water. Her hand went below the surface and immediately began to stroke my hot organ, and I bent my head to lick the glistening drops of water off those lovely breasts.

We were both hot and ready, and I wondered if she would stay hot all the way to the bedroom. I need not have bothered with my wondering. It soon became evident that she wanted it right there, in that big tub of water.

She pushed me back towards the edge, and I found that there were steps going down into the tub. I sat down on the middle one, and she quickly dipped her head under water to kiss the head of my dong, running her tongue all over it, at the same time starting to tickle my balls with her fingertips.

She came up for a quick breath of air, then went right down again, this time wrapping her lips around my shaft and taking it all the way into her mouth. I thought that she was really getting to me, and then she started something that really turned me on. She began blowing bubbles, and the tickling sensation they sent running up the length of my cock nearly drove me right out of the tub.

She came up for air again, and when she did I grabbed her, pulling her tight against me, kissing her long and hard while my hands roamed over her body. I was still sitting on that step, and she sat down on one of my legs, wrapping her legs around mine and pressing her hairy crotch against my knee, sliding back and forth, partially supported by the water. I could see that the stiff hairs on my leg, brushing against her vaginal lips and clitoris, was really getting to her.

I slid down onto the bottom step, bringing the water level up to the middle of my chest, and when I did she spread her legs and wrapped them around my waist, half-floating, the floating hair between her legs brushing against the head of my organ, bringing me to the point where I just had to get it on with her.

I grabbed her hips and pulled her down over me, sliding deep into her hot and wet pussy. Her legs tightened around my waist and we just sat there for a minute, savoring the sensation of our hot bodies locked together in the cooling water. Then she released the pressure on my waist and floated upwards, the friction of my shaft inside her body the only thing that kept her from floating completely away.

I pulled her down again, and when I released her she floated upwards again. It was an easy way to ball, but the pressures and needs that were filling our bodies couldn't accept that slow-motion action. She began to use her legs, and soon she was bouncing up and down on me as my hips began to jerk in time with her motion. Sweat was pouring off both of us as we slammed at each other, half-in and half-out of the cool water, and it was only minutes before her moans and shudders told me that she was ready to come. My own climax was ready, and when I felt her tunnel contracting and shuddering around my shaft I let myself fire, driving up with my hips so hard that I came off the step and we floated out into the tub, with my flesh still locked deep inside of her, jerking and straining.

Just as I was reaching my peak we sank completely under the surface, and the shock of that cool water closing over our sweating upper bodies caused both of us to climax all over again. We came up sputtering and laughing, and as I slowly pulled out of her I almost cried out from the pleasure and pain as the cool water hit my hot flesh.

We climbed out of the tub, and I was ready to head for the bedroom. Then she gave me the news I should have expected. It was only in the tub that she enjoyed sex. I should have known. Oh, well. I was still sweating, and I needed another bath anyway. Several of them, actually. Not only did that turn out to be my most erotic experience ever, but it was a very, very clean night. ●

But actually, I don't regret it, because I never would have met Jerry if I hadn't been divorced. I grew up in a nice, strait-laced atmosphere where you are true-blue to your husband and you have children and cook and clean house and do the laundry. So, when I broke loose and became, in a word, Free, then was when I told myself I ought to try everything.

Told myself, Hell. I was climbing the walls with frustration, and I didn't know what to do. Nothing in my long and physically satisfactory marriage had prepared me for going without sex entirely. Just cut off, like that. I couldn't believe my emotions. I was ready to scratch and scream and run around in circles. I would have begged for it from my husband, if I could have found him—forget the pride! I would have approached the milkman, but he was too old; the gas-meter man was too young; and when my neighbor's husband approached me I had to turn him down because my reputation in the neighborhood was already bad enough from being divorced, and I couldn't use any more trouble.

It was a long, hard road to get where I am today, which is a happy and contented swinger, but still a free and autonomous individual. First I tried all the organizations in town that catered to singles. Some of them were deadly dull, some unfriendly, and some I obviously didn't fit into at all because I was either too old (despite being far too young for Senior Citizens) or because I didn't belong to a hobby cult. I can't garden, crochet, bowl, play bridge, or even checkers, for that matter. My children were grown up enough to be on their own, thank goodness, so the parties where the men ended up talking together about business, and the women about bottle feedings and diapers, would have to do without me.

I had a succession of dates and meetings with a widely assorted bunch of men, some rather nice but most not exactly sophisticated or sexy. I was insatiably curious—or shall we just say I was insatiable—so I usually didn't need much urging to experiment sexually if I liked them at all. I was utterly astonished at what I found. Either I was an over-sexed female, they were under-sexed, or else one of us was playing in the wrong league. I remember one fellow who particularly surprised me. He was so gung-ho, so cave-man, so aggressive in the way he danced—I could have orgasms during an extended pelvis to pelvis tango—and voracious in the way he kissed that I was more than willing to go to bed with him. I now believe he just wore himself out on all the preliminaries, to which he committed himself with every girl he courted, because we were finished, cleaned up and ready to go out to the movies, in half an hour. He certainly was easy to please, but I found out right there, if I hadn't known it before, that I wasn't! He was satisfied. I was frustrated.

It was inevitable that I would finally arrive at swinging. I cautiously joined a club and answered and met every single one of my contacts. My luck was a little better, but not an awful lot, for I was still just single dating. Then I met Jerry. He did not seem like an ideal prospect. Medium height and build, sandy hair, hazel eyes, genial smile, affectionate manner, not awfully intelligent but extremely nice and agreeable, no great conversationalist except that he liked to talk about sex. I found myself warming to the ingenuous, rather self-contented aura he exuded, and began enjoying an exchange of sexual confidences with him as we talked in the car on the way out to our first dinner. I asked him about his ex-wife.

"She was a great swinger. I guess I'm still very fond of her, but she got off into the weird scene, began taking dope, and I didn't want any part of that. Still, she told me any time I got horny to come back and see her. She said I was still the best she ever had." He grinned self-consciously.

I was not yet comfortable enough with him to blurt out what I was thinking, but I thought to myself "What a Testimonial!" Another woman's opinion is a damn good gague, if she's a swinger. I'd rather have her words than ten men telling me what a stud their friend is. I'd rather have this kind of information, in fact, than any other kind I can think of. So, after dinner, instead of going anywhere else, we just naturally gravitated into bed. It was then that he somehow managed to make me feel like a fantastic person, virgin, Mata Hari, baby doll, wife, mistress—the whole thing.

He began with the kind of kissing and caressing that a girl doesn't get very often—the kind of caressing that makes you want to caress back, the kind of kissing you can get lost in. Well, I liked kissing him. There is something about the way a kiss is delivered that makes each one different. The ones I don't like are (a) where the man seems to want to swallow me whole immediately, or (b) where he withdraws because he apparently doesn't want my tongue in his mouth, or (c) when he wants to bite it. But this was an experimental kiss, to find out what I liked, a caressing of the lips, minute nibbles at the edge of the lips, small exhalations of breath turning into intakes, a light exploring of the tongue into the teeth, gums, under the lips, the roof of the mouth, taking plenty of time, no hurry, no hurry at all. Then his hands, teasing, touching, withdrawing, flicking with the lightest touch imaginable, tickling, exploring nooks and crannies I didn't even know were there, until I was half out of my mind, squirming and gasping for breath, now laughing a little from the tickling, now crying with desire. He was huge and hard as the proverbial rod the porno books are always making up. He entered slowly, until he knew I was mad with passion, and then, wham, all the way in, easy, out, pause, and wham again. In no time at all I had an orgasm. He had a slight smile as he watched me very carefully. Then he said "hold on" and began something I had never felt before. He swung into exact double time, a perfect concept of rhythm which was exciting beyond belief. He waited for another orgasm from me, keeping it up, then, instead of coming himself, or stopping, or slowing down, he eased me with a circular massage that felt like heaven as he prepared to begin the whole process over again, pacing himself all the way. This time he came too.

It was such a total surprise to me, such a vital new experience, that I was breathless not only with the physical exertion but with wonder and awe at his stamina. We got up, had a drink, talked a while, and did it again. We slept a couple hours, and did it again. I couldn't get enough. I couldn't get enough to the extent that he moved in with me and stayed for a year.

That first time. Oh yes, I guess that was easily the most erotic experience I ever had. ● of making the white wines. The red color of the red wine comes from the skin only. The difference between sweet and dry wines depends upon the stage at which the fermentation is stopped. During the fermentation process the sugar in the grape juice is converted into alcohol. If the fermentation is stopped before all the sugar is converted, the wine is sweet. If the fermentation is allowed to continue until all the sugar is converted, the wine is dry.

BILL ROTSLER

If the main dish is to be white meat (pork), fish or fowl, a dry white wine is preferred by most people. A good selection for fish or seafood would be a Rhenish (ren-ish) wine such as Rhine (rine), Riesling (reeze-ling), Moselle (mo-zell) or Chablis (shab-lee).

Liebfraumilch (leeb-frow-milsh), originally a German wine, is now grown in many places, and is perfect with white meat and fowl. It is also sometimes used as an aperitif. Chablis and dry sauterne (sew-turn) are also good with fowl and white meat dishes.

With pork and lamb many people enjoy a rosé (ro-zay), or pink wine. The many rosé wines are also used with other dishes, by personal preference, even with red meat dishes.

There are specialty dishes which require their own wines, such as a chianti (key-on-tee) with Italian main courses. This wine is the native wine of Italy, and if you want the best, get a chianti labeled "classic" or "classico." For salads, the rosé and dry white wines are good, such as a Liebfraumilch with a caesar salad.

After dinner. These are the dessert wines. This time is the forte of the sweet wines. Port is the most popular, that full-bodied sweet wine originally from Portugal, but now bountifully available here. The oloroso sherry discussed earlier is a very good dessert wine, or the sweet sauterne, or natural sauterne. At this time, after dinner, you may also wish to depart from the wines, into the brandies, the Benedictines, and even back to champagne again.

DON PFEIL

Once again, I consider champagne to be a dessert wine, a natural with a fruit or melon dessert. A port, sherry, or even better, a Madeira, can be served as a dessert wine, as can any sweet wine, but I have found that there is often too much contrast between the dry wines served with the meal and the sweet wines served afterwards. There is too much of a shock to the taste buds, leaving something of a sickly-sweet aftertaste.

I find it completely incredible that you would consider a brandy or cognac along with the dessert wines. These should be served only after all eating has stopped. The product of the Benedictine Monks should be considered a course in itself. As a historical note, brandy (cognac) came about because of a lack of transportation. French wine-makers, several centuries ago, found themselves with an oversupply of wine and no way to get it to market. One enterprising wine-maker distilled his table wine, figuring that he could ship it to market in this concentrated form, then add water to reconvert it. To his surprise, he found a ready market for the concentrated form. Later, wine (and brandy) making became a monopoly of the church, with the making of brandy being assigned to the order of Benedictine monks. To this day the Benedictine order produces some of the finest brandy to be found.

BILL ROTSLER

Serving wine. Perhaps you have heard that each wine has its own shape of glass, but this is not true. Any wine may be unblushingly served in a large tulip-shaped stemmed glass of seven to nine ounces. In fact, it is perferred by many. Filled to half or two-thirds capacity, it has enough wine per serving and enough "bouquet room" above the wine where the fragrance may collect and give enjoyment to the taster's sense of smell.

Again, the movies have given us the image that only shallow, wide-mouthed champagne glasses are to be used, when actually the tulip-shaped glass is better, since it traps more of the escaping bubbles and the fragrance and slows the race to flatness.

In general, you should serve white and dessert wines and aperitifs chilled; red wines slightly cool or at room temperature. If possible, open the bottle an hour before serving, to allow the wine to "breathe." This increases the bouquet effect of almost all wines.

DON PFEIL

Sorry, Bill, but there is a different shaped glass for each type of wine. However, I do agree with you that the tulip-shaped glass can be used in almost all cases. Actually, the red wines can be served in just about any kind of clear glass. White wines, and champagnes, need the long-stemmed glasses so that the hand, when holding the glass, will not warm the wine. Red wines should always be opened at least an hour before serving and left out to breathe. Among other things, this will allow any small quantities of vinegar which may have formed in the wine to evaporate. This is not so important in white wines, since they are kept chilled and therefore there will be very little evaporation, or very little bouquet, for that matter. Sparkling wines, such as champagne or cold duck, should, of course, never be opened before serving.

BILL ROTSLER

There is a charming ritual, that of allowing a guest or selected guest to sample the wine for his approval before pouring. This compliments that guest, implying his approval is desired and that he or she has the experience to judge. Actually, I have never seen anyone ever refuse to allow a wine to be served, for perhaps that would be impolite, but I have heard some astute observations. This formality is fun, and gives a "wine snob" a chance to impress the uninitiated.

DON PFEIL

Pouring a little bit in a guest's glass and waiting for approval, as seen in many movies, may impress the uninitiated, but it certainly wouldn't impress the wine snob. You see, the movies leave out one important part of the ritual. First the host should pour just a fraction of an inch in his own glass, then a sample into the guest's glass. This is to insure that any small pieces of broken-off cork will not end up in the guest's glass. Of course, it doesn't make as impressive a ritual this way.

There is, however, a reason for the ritual. In a restaurant, when a fine old wine is ordered, there is a chance that the wine might have gone to vinegar. Therefore a small quantity of the wine is served to the guest, for prior tasting, so that his guests will not be served a glass of vinegar. In

SANDSTONE, from page 29

I sat among a group of about nine or ten people, swapping introductions. The atmosphere was casual, although there was a bit more cuddling going on than before. Men and women began to embrace, not passionately, but with a sort of casual friendliness. Occasionally one couple would get up from the couch and go over to a corner of the room, lie down on the thickly carpeted floor, and have at it. Another couple might join them, or perhaps a single figure would become absorbed in their cavorting, but it was never a big deal. After a while the couple rejoined the group and there were no snide references to their absence. Voices were generally low, conversation flowed, all were extremely comfortable, and there was much laughter and congeniality. A few people were drinking, but on the whole there was very little liquor consumption during the evening. That figures, as alcohol is a depressant and that's the last thing anyone wanted. There were absolutely no signs of drugs and, from everything I've read about swingers, drugs are taboo, anyway.

I retrieved my sketch book and made a few drawings of the groups around the fireplace. Actually, other than the fact that they were nude, there wasn't anything unusual about the scene. If they had had their clothes on, it would have been like any number of social gatherings. Everyone was delighted to find that they had an artist in their group, and assured me that I would have more stimulating subject matter later in the evening. While I drew, one of the men came and sat by me and we got into a semi-intellectual talk about the state of the arts in America. He was about fifty, an architect, and a member in good-standing at the retreat. There was no hint of sex in our conversation, just two people who happened to be naked sitting around sharing a thought or two. The fact that the couple next to us were fondling each other—he cupping her breast and she stroking his partially erect penis—never deterred us from our examination of the deterioration of the level of painting in the institutions of higher learning. Actually, it was somewhat humorous, and I found it difficult keeping my eyes off the half-aroused member that was being persistently coaxed to a near-state of erection. I was denied the ultimate sight by the announcement of dinner.

All activities stopped in mid-something or other and a horde of hungry people formed a neat line around the sumptuous dining room table. Prime ribs and trimmings were served, and everybody loaded their plates and sat down on the floor to consume the fuel that was to sustain them for the evening. Dinner was a leisurely affair. Once I got used to seeing napkins neatly placed over pubic areas this scene, too, offered nothing out of the ordinary. As a matter of fact, everything there seemed to be in its proper perspective, and everything was carried out in an unhurried, unfrantic manner. Nothing seemed out of place or in bad taste in this haven for fornicators high above the harried world below.

After supper the place began to fill up rapidly with new arrivals. People waved gaily to one another and went downstairs to shed their apparel. Sans clothing, they then joined the group on the upper level and faded into glorious anonymity with the rest of the nudists. I guess one of the most interesting observations I made during my brief stay was the physical "sameness" that characterized the participants. Being only human, I admit I wondered how I would stack up in comparison with my fellow females once stripped of any concealing garb. As more and more people filled the place I suddenly realized that there was not one body that was unique from another. Put enough humans together, and everyone finds they not only have a twin, but sometimes come in sextuplets. There were a fair share of small-breasted, flat-tummied, long-legged women. There were also a proportionate amount of soft bellies accompanied by sagging bosoms. Some ladies had varicose veins; some sported scars on their abdomens; some had bushy mounds covering their pubic areas; others were grey and balding. The men also came in various sizes and shapes. Paunches and sagging buttocks with miniscule penises were much in style. So were muscular young men with not so muscular organs. Then, too, there were men who, when limp, hung low and conjured up all sorts of imagery (in my mind) about what that formidable organ would look like when it was in full heat.

The point is, put 'em all together, turn 'em all upside down, and by and large they all look alike. Young and aged (they ranged in age from approximately 21 to 65), all mingled comfortably in a non-competitive momentary lifestyle.

The interesting effect of all this duplication was that there seemed to be absolutely no sense of competition between or among the sexes. Men with little ones sat in groups with guys with big ones. Young women and older women chatted amiably. Oh, lest I forget, Sandstone is interracial, and blacks and whites come together happily in their common cause. And the myth of the negro and his super organ is soon dispelled in this homogenuous mixture. His size, as with his fellow caucasian, is simply a chance of birth.

Now then, let's get on with the play. Shortly after dinner people began to leave the living room and head downstairs. The lower level consisted of another large room with a bar and a fireplace. It was heavily carpeted in deep red, and sported a king-sized water bed. Several people were lying on it, tickling one another and giggling. Others were sitting or lying about on the floor talking, tickling, fondling and, in general, enjoying themselves.

There was another small room off this one, which is aptly called The Balling Room. There are three mattresses in close proximity to one another, and it is here that a couple goes when they want to be alone. Figure that one out, if you can, since it is not unusual for all three mattresses to be occupied at one time. However, balling is not restricted to this small sanctuary. It can happen any place, at any moment. The water bed is a kind of gassy place to screw, but it requires a certain knowledge of its idiosyncracies to be able to complete the act without getting bounced off. I never saw anyone do much more than a bit of erotic massaging and exploratory probing on the swaying edifice. As a result, my attempts to draw any and all of the participants were thwarted, since they all seemed to get hysterical as they bounced about, and soon departed for more level ground or into the abyss of The Balling Room.

I was struggling with a sketch of several couples cavorting about when I felt a hand on my shoulder. It belonged to a man who made signs with his hands that he, too, was an artist. Turned out he was a deaf mute, one of several couples who are members of the club. He was intrigued with the fact that I was sketching. We talked via sign language and the written word, during which he invited me to: one, come to an exhibit of his work; two, meet his wife; and three, ball. I was pleased to meet his wife, couldn't make his show, and gracefully declined the pleasant screwing invitation.

The nice thing about Sandstone, I was to find out, was that it was possible to say no without hurting anyone's feelings. I mean, nobody takes it personally. I suspect that's because, eventually, everybody does it to everybody, and there's nothing very personal about fornication when it's as casually administered as a handshake.

Actually, nobody seemed up-tight in the whole place. You know, I recently saw a T.V. documentary on walruses, and the explorers found that they could move freely and without fear of being molested amongst the mammals, so long as they crawled about on all fours or slid around on their bellies. It seems that walruses are prone most of the time, and that the bulls fight only when they rear up—the better to clobber each other. Danger or fear will cause them to leave their supine position and assume the pose of warrior. Well, at Sandstone everybody's sitting or lying down, except when they are moving from one place to another. Obviously, as with the walruses, man is also peaceful when he's on his belly or his haunches. That must account for the tranquility in orgyland. Sociologists and anthropologists, take heed!

After a bit I went out to the pool, but it was too dark to draw. I thought about a dip, but I suddenly had visions of thousands of wiggling sperm swimming about. I mean, where does it all go? Obviously that pool was fertile and alive with the spent seeds of ballers. Not for me. I went back to the house.

Everybody seemed to be resting when I entered. I sat down, pen poised, hoping they would all start to writhe and I could capture a wild bacchanal ala El Greco—who really didn't do orgies. His bag was religion, but boy, his spirits sure could writhe! Turned out everyone was tired and kind of catnapping. By now it was after midnight, and I, too, was tired. While I was resting a nice stranger touched my breast, softly murmured that I was an exciting looking woman, and asked me if I would like to fuck. I yawned a negative reply, but thanked him sweetly for asking me to share a moment or two with him. Nothing like a direct approach, is there?

We talked for a while. He told me it was such a pleasure to come up there to relax where nobody played games. "You know," he explained, "down there, if you want to go to bed with a woman, you have to go through the whole wooing bit. You've got to take her out on dates, go to the theatre, go out to dinner, and then maybe a few weeks or a month goes by, and you finally go to bed. Half the time you find you don't really dig each other anyway, and you've wasted all that time. Here it's simple. No involvement, no commitment, just a simple screw."

I guess that sums it up. That's what Sandstone is; just an uncomplicated, impersonal roll in the hay. I find, as I write this, that I have no moral statement to make. I can't come up with a judgment. The sociologists and psychiatrists are busy analyzing and dissecting swingers, and that's as it should be. That's their job. For me . . . well, it was an experience. ● friends then jump in.

Let me know how it works out.

Here's another "Believe It Or Don't" fact: The Sheik Mujib Daud Alani of ancient Iraq had 141 wives, and every one of them had her period at the same time.

* * *

Nudity is nature's way of saying "Hello."

* * *

In a conversation I was having with an internationally famous gossip we compared the amazing similarities of Ralph Nader and Bobby Fischer. They're both compulsive, gawkey, reclusive, ascetic, champions, genius intelligence, unsociable, and given to wearing ill-fitting blue suits. I mentioned to my friend that it's a matter of public record that Nader doesn't mess around with men, women, or animals, and wondered if Bobby Fischer was of the same persuasion.

My friend said that he heard from an absolutely reliable source that the last time Fischer balled a chick was just before a chess tournament in 1963. Fischer finished 12th. (If I remember correctly, Fischer's opponents were using a Queen Sacrifice opening at the time.) He swore off chicks, and has gone on to win consistently ever since. What lesson can we learn from this?

This also brings up another question. It's a law in every state that it's libelous to impeach the virtue of someone; that is, to accuse someone of being unchaste. I think this law is antediluvian. According to the moral standards of today, I think a person should be able to sue someone who attacks him for being chaste.

A friend called to tell me that the end of the human penis is larger than the shaft—something I had never noticed before. It is an interesting fact, because almost all other mammals have a cylindrical penis, or one which comes to a point. I asked my friend if he thought the human penis was designed that way so that the woman (or maybe the man) would get more pleasure. He said no, it was designed that way to keep your hand from accidentally hitting your head.

The inside front cover of the April issue of the conservative Gentlemen's Quarterly has an ad for Nunn Bush shoes (which is one hell of a brand name) featuring a naked chick kneeling, with her eyes closed and a provocative smile on her face, hugging a large boot.

It looks like the shoe fetish fad, which is in full stride now, has just taken a giant step forward.

SWINGING THRU HISTORY

"He was invited to dine abroad every day and never declined . . . He went to his Invitation to his Dinner and after that went sometimes to the Play, sometimes to the Philosophers but most commonly to visit those Ladies who were complaisant enough . . . In these Agreable and important Occupations and Amusements, the Afternoon and Evening was spent, and he came home at all hours . . ." One can visualize stuffy old Adams, dipping his pen in poison, wondering why he couldn't find ". . . Ladies who were complaisant enough."

It probably didn't make Adams any happier to know that Ben had written a drinking song that ended:

"Then toss off your Glasses, and scorn the dull Asses,
Who missing the Kernel still gnaw the Shell.
What's Love, Rule or Riches . . . ?
They're Vanity, Vanity, Vanity still."

Or it might be that Adams happened across a letter from one of Franklin's Ladies:

". . . Would you, could you receive me Wednesday, the day after tomorrow, at ten in the morning, and close your door for an hour . . . Send me a word right away; it must not be known that you are writing to me or that I am going to see you . . ." This is from one Madame Brillon—wife of a French official.

Of course, an hour isn't that long—but when they start calling you for Wednesday morning gigs, you'll know you've finally made the scene.

In fact, if you boil old Ben down, as apparently the women of Paris and Passy tried to do, you find a lot for the modern swinger to emulate. Party all night, every night. Live for the next conquest, and still have time to fly kites and invent bifocals.

If there is such a thing as reincarnation, it would be interesting to see Ben come back now at, say, Aspen—during the height of the ski season. When all the bunnies are up there. I can see it all . . .

In walks this really cool dude with some kind of nice velvet frock coat and groovy wire-framed glasses pushed high on his forehead. For a full minute he surveys the smoke-packed lounge, picks out the best looking chick, and finally makes his move.

"Hey, baby, what's happening?" he asks, waving a finger at the bartender. She gives him the cool look—notices the lechery in his eyes, always a good sign, and the cool way he lights his individualistic clay pipe. She likes him.

He knows he's got her, but figures he might as well do the gig anyway.

"Did you know a stitch in time saves nine?" he asks—then, after a pause, "Months, that is . . ."

He couldn't miss. ●

(since I'm assuming that the first girlfriend was the cause of their flaring up) you might, in some intimate conversation, approach the subject with your son and see how he responds. If he's embarrassed you will probably want to drop it, but if he seems interested, you just might have a good time together with no harm done. One of my best friends did exactly this, and she said it was a delicate thing to decide, but they were so happy to have found this extra dimension to their fondness for one another that it was a pleasant and beautiful interlude in their lives. So there just isn't any cut and dried answer to your question, except that it would be incorrect for you to feel guilt about it.

Q. Although I think my sex life is pretty good, I am always looking for things to improve it. I have heard that there are exercises to control the vaginal muscles, and that women who can do this can give their lovers a very extra-special thrill by being able to grab the penis during or after intercourse. Can you tell me about this? Is it possible?

A. Yes, it's possible, although not all women are physiologically able to become adept at it. But if you even try, I guarantee it will please your lover. To get some idea of how it works, you could ask him to tell you to examine how he feels when, during a pause in intercourse, you (a) sneeze or (b) laugh. If he can feel it, you're well on your way. Then, the next time you urinate, try stopping in midstream. It is this same muscle control, using exactly the same action, which constitutes this exercise.

Q. My doctor has taken me off the Pill, and I'm wondering if anybody will be annoyed if I come to a party with my diaphragm?

A. Of course not. You don't want any baby swingers cluttering up your parties, do you? Strictly aside, of course, from the problem of an unknown father, the whole thing would put you out of action for a while. ●

The underlying reasoning of the French is that almost any kind of satisfying meal will produce some degree of flatulence. And that sort of thing just won't do. There are two solutions: don't eat at all (emulating the French in a sneaky way), or at least restrict yourself to the lightest, least flatulent foods possible. Rephrased, one should avoid rushing off to a swinging get-together immediately after a full-course Thanksgiving meal.

Oddly—and very self-defeating—we Americans have adopted the habit of absorbing myths and old-wives tales from just about every other country, culture and civilization. One of these myths (groups of myths) concerns the matter of aphrodisiacs—especially foods which are purportedly aphrodisiacal. The result is that many of us have taken to eating certain things—on purpose—just before the big event.

But, then, by the mere mention of aphrodisiacs we find we have opened a whole new can of worms. Are there actually some natural foods which have a tendency to increase virility, potency or the capacity for arousal? And if so, can they be consumed in such a way (or at such a time) as to not interfere with a good sexual performance? Perhaps we could do well to devote a bit of space here before we tackle our first set of swinging recipes.

Generally, the seers and experimenters of the past have looked to the herb family for evidence of sex-arousal qualities. It was usually the male for whom the magic potion was sought, because it was believed the female was only a passive partner in the act—one needing no arousal at all. Other things besides herbs (hippomanes of the colt, hair of the Rhino horn, etc) were tried, and to this day certain persons swear by them.

Modern science scorns all these superstitions, but nutritionists agree that some foods do energize us or stimulate us more than others. It is uncertain whether these "energizers" help us in any lasting fashion, or if their effects are cumulative.

Today, the mere use of the word "aphrodisiac" has taken on a different tone. The thinking is this: good, old-fashioned, rollicking, highly-athletic sex can only be achieved by persons in good health. Therefore, anything which produces good health is, in some measure, an aphrodisiac. Thin thinking, it seems, but if nutritionists buy it, who are we to complain?

In strictest medical terms, our physiology text tells us there is no safe aphrodisiac for human use. For example, the commonly used Spanish Fly (properly called Cantharides—ground up beetle wings) works on large bovines and equines (female), because these animals' urethras are composed of course, fibrous sarcomatic tissue, whereas the human female's urethra cannot tolerate it. In other words, it works on humans, but the side-effects are usually quite serious, often disastrous, and occasionally fatal.

A great deal has been said about the seafood group, and, in truth, there could be something to this. High in protein and certain vitamins, most crustaceans are ocean-floor scavengers and manage to pick up miniscule amounts of mineral grains from silt deposits. These microscopic particles are impervious to the human digestive process, and become irritants to the genito-urinary system, causing a certain delightful excitation. However, if this theory is true, we are actually discussing an accidental aphrodisiac, and one which could—in time—have negative side-effects.

At any rate—despite all the claims and counterclaims, we are probably safe in assuming that no food will automatically "turn her on" (or "him"). Anyone who claims to have undergone such an experience is probably overlooking some other stimulant that cropped up and affected somebody's primary sexual organ—which is the brain.

All in all, it begins to appear the French have the idea—starve your way to the perfect orgasm. Which, if true, would mean we would have to devote our articles to two groups of people, the "befores" and the "afters". Well, that's all right with us. We could do worse.

For the "befores" (people who eat before, that is), there are only a few simple rules to follow:

(1) Eat nothing heavy, nor too much of anything. Condition yourself to eat early and/or sparingly. Never schedule a swinging party and a feast together.
(2) Do not eat vegetables of the cabbage family (cabbage, broccoli, brussels sprouts). They cause extreme flatulence.
(3) Stay away from garlic, onions, etc., except by mutual consent.
(4) If you are male, and if you are expecting to be fellated to completion, do not eat asparagus for at least three full days prior to the party.

For the "afters", the rules are even simpler: no crackers.

Ordinarily, it would seem necessary to mention something about beverages, especially alcohol. But the simple fact is that swingers are notoriously light drinkers—I must have attended forty or fifty swinging parties where alcohol wasn't even offered. Those parties where hard liquor was served were always very sober affairs, too, so the point is truly academic. But since it is always nice to offer something tastey and thirst-quenching, and since we have noted very good results from our Wassail recipe, we shall include it in this month's initial offering. But be careful, it contains both beer and sherry!

Our other two recipes are for a Curry Dip and Stuffed Mushrooms, both winners depending on the tastebuds of your partners and the informality of the party. In a manner of speaking, we are following the thinking of our friends, the French, in that we've never heard of an incapacitated swinger as a result of such fare as this. Besides, you can always eat it afterwards.

Wassail, in ancient anglo-saxon, means "Be thou complete." It was a greeting or toast, much like, "to your health." This wassail punch is a good beverage for a party at any time of the year, for it can be served at room temperature (traditional), or chilled. Don't add ice, however, for it spoils the flavor.

Wassail Bowl

3 quarts warm beer
1 cup honey
1 teaspoon ginger
1 teaspoon nutmeg
3 cups cream sherry
sliced lemon

Combine 1 quart beer and honey in punch bowl, then stir in spices, remaining beer and sherry. Float thin lemon slices on punch. Makes about 30 punch cup servings.

A dip is always nice, because it can be prepared in advance and set aside to chill. It makes entertaining easy on the hostess. Here's an exotic one which follows the principles of good eating.

Curry Dip

2 cups sour cream
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon sweet basil
½ teaspoon ginger
½ teaspoon curry
sesame crackers

Combine all ingredients and chill for one hour before serving. Serve with sesame crackers, wheat thins or corn chips.

Here's a warm one for the chafing dish. Prepare it in advance and then warm in the oven prior to serving in chafing dish.

Stuffed Mushrooms

30 large mushroom caps
3 tablespoons butter
1 - 5 oz. can chicken spread
¼ cup chopped almonds
¼ teaspoon curry
paprika

Saute mushroom caps in butter until lightly browned. Combine chicken spread, almonds and curry powder, and spoon into mushroom caps. Sprinkle lightly with paprika. Broil until filling bubbles. ● how turned on are you?

Do you lead a life of quiet desperation and sexual frustration?

You can't live 23 hours of your life turned off and then expect to be turned on in bed.

The fully actualized person makes the best bed-mate. If you are well rounded out of bed you'll stand a better chance of having a gratifying sex life.

To find out how "turned on" you are, look at each subject listed from A to Z. Examine the answers. Next to each (a, b, c, etc.) write the number of the statement that applies most strongly to your feelings about the subject. Then add your score and read the interpretation.

There are no right or wrong answers, but you must answer each question. Think of it only with regard to yourself.

ANSWERS, HOW TURNED ON ARE YOU?

Score 26-52: You need artificial respiration! You are definitely "turned off" and tuned out. You might as well be dead because you are scared to death of living. You have managed to arm yourself against the troubles of life, and, in so doing, you have contrived to arm yourself against the joys of life. You are so far gone that it is dubious that you could help yourself out of your rut. Run, don't walk, to your nearest "head-shrinker."

Score 53-85: You are afraid of getting "turned on" unless someone takes you by the hand and rapes you into it. You realize that you are missing something but you lack the guts to go out and make it happen. Think of something you have thought of trying but for one reason or another have been putting off. Then go out and do it! The first step is always the hardest. Stop putting stumbling blocks on your path to happiness.

Score 86-105: Congratulations! You have exposed yourself to the world and found your sensual quota forever on the upswing. You know better than anyone else that there are certain areas of sexuality that you haven't tried. Continue having a good time and pass out your magic formula.

Score 106-131: Wow! You are on high broil! People around you cannot help but feel and see the glow of a truly turned on person. There is nothing you won't give a try, and if it's wild enough you'll love it. There are times when you'll need to slow down a little. Don't worry. You won't miss out on anything! You just need to spend more time really deeply enjoying all the things you have guts enough to try.

Score 132-156: You are either a new, unheard of kind of animal, a master in self-deception, or a bold-faced liar! If most of your answers fall in the "I never tire of doing this" category, you must be exhausted by now and ready for a long rest cure. Are your answers based on the real you or on the fantasized you?

When you're at a swinging party, there are a couple of things you might try. First, try taking the test with friends, then everyone compare answers. You might find out some surprising things about people you thought you knew well. Second, try having a friend put in the answers for you, as he or she sees you. In this case, you might find out some surprising things about yourself. ●

the case of a dinner party at home, therefore, the proper procedure is for the host to pour the wine into his own glass first, and then for his guests.

BILL ROTSLER

Find a good wine dealer. I do not mean a local liquor store owner, who is pushing volume. Discovering someone with genuine knowledge and a good selection of stock that is within a decent traveling distance might be a matter of luck, but look around. Look especially at the imported wine stock. Do they look like tag ends of random vintages purchased at sales, or does the selection bear evidence of a thoughtful range across the spectrum? Look for wine sales. I have found excellent bargains in wine "dumped" by liquor stores that had something their clientele did not appreciate. But get to know your dealer and listen to his advice, especially in the beginning. If you find something that particularly pleases you, case prices are available everywhere, reducing the per-bottle price somewhat.

DON PFEIL

Bill's right. Finding a good store, with a good selection, can be difficult, but it's well worth the trouble to search one out. Find a store that not only has a good selection, but a store owner who knows what he's selling. You will often find stores which have good wine selections, but the wine was placed by a salesman, and the store owner doesn't have the slightest idea of what is good and what isn't. When you find a store owner who does know his wines, ask him for his recommendations. You will soon be able to determine whether or not he knows what he's talking about. If he steers you straight on wines, you might try a little pattern that I've developed. In order to drink good wines and develop a cellar without having to float a loan, I've made a practice of buying three bottles of any recommended wine. One bottle I drink right away. If it's average or poor, I then go ahead and drink the rest with hamburgers or something. But, if it's good, I hold one bottle for a future dinner, and bury one in the back of my rack to age.

There are two basic types of imported wines. The "chateau" wines and the "genre" wines. Let us take, for example, the wines of the Rothschild vinyards.

The Lafite–Rothschild chateau (house) has several thousand acres of grapes under cultivation. Most of these grapes will, when ripe, be sold to a wine-making firm at auction, and the wines will be labelled as a "Rothschild" wine. However, there are some "private" fields, the grapes from which are kept for winemaking by the chateau. The wine from these will be "Chateau Lafite–Rothschild." A bottle of bordeaux or Margeaux or St. Emilion from the Rothschild vinyards might cost $5 to $15. A bottle of Chateau Lafite—Rothschild might cost $20 to $50, depending on year.

The difference is that the chateau wine is of "known" quality, while the wine from the auctioned grapes might or might not be of equal quality. This is why I save bottles of "inexpensive" wines. When aged, they might well be the equal of the chateau wine, and sometimes even command the price of the chateau wine (after aging ten or fifteen years). As a point aside, it takes at least five years for a red wine to properly age, and some don't come to full maturity for more than twenty years. Recently a bottle of Mouton–Rothschild, which sold for $12, was resold for $1,700. Aging can make quite a difference in red wines, and a wine which seems only average at five may be exceptional at twenty.

In general, the "house" vs. "genre" also holds true in the California wines. Shortly after our civil war several younger sons of noble French wine-growing families came to California, bringing their pure-bred grapes with them. They formed the basis for the California wine industry, so, when you are buying a California wine, you are actually getting a wine from a French grape. These houses make wine for general sale, but they also keep some of those grapes back for their special wine. Here a case would be the Bealeau Vinyards, which sell under the brand name "B.V." The vineyard was founded by Louis Latour. Chateau Latour, from France, is one of the best, and most expensive, wines you can buy. B.V., from the same grapes, transplanted to California, is one of the best domestic wines. But, just as the Chateau holds back some grapes, so does B.V., and the "special" wine is sold with one addition to the label. The words "Private Reserve." The price is usually $3 to $5 more a bottle, but it's worth it.

Wine storage is no real problem, unless you are really developing an honest-to-god wine cellar. There are attractive racks available, suitable to a variety of decors. Just as some people find a wall of filled bookcases an attractive decoration, so do others find an openly displayed wine rack a delight. Just as your choice of visible books indicates your tastes and interests, so does a gathering of wines.

DON PFEIL

True, wine storage is no real problem, so long as you have a rack, or intend to drink the wine quickly. If you intend to keep a bottle of wine more than a week or so, it must be stored on its side. Wine bottles are sealed with a cork, and if the bottle is stored upright the cork will soon dry out. When this happens the cork shrinks, letting in air, and soon you will be short one bottle of wine and long one bottle of vinegar. In addition, wine bottles, when stored on a rack, should be kept out of direct sunlight, should be in a place where there is not a large variation in temperature, and should be turned every couple of days to keep the sediment (which all French wines have) from caking along one side of the bottle.

Wine is to be enjoyed, not worshipped. Just as there are rabid baseball fans, chess players who think of nothing else, opera or rock fans to whom there is no other life, there are wine snobs and Wine Snobs and WINE SNOBS! Unless you want that sort of life, this guide to the enjoyment of wine has given you the basics. Enjoy.

GUIDE TO ORGYDOM

be spent getting on each other's nerves.

The need for diversion is very strong in all higher organisms. When stimuli is reduced in lower animals, they usually go to sleep, but this isn't true for humans. Experiments have been conducted where people have been deprived of all diversion, of all sensory intake, by placing them in absolutely dark and soundproof rooms, or submerging them in body-temperature water. The results were that these people became temporarily schizophrenic—at least to the degree where they started to create fantasy worlds—i.e., hallucinate. The mind must have diversion or it becomes a bit warped.

It's simply a statement of fact that, either through genetic coding or some instinctive mechanism, man seeks diversion. It's a survival characteristic. Up until now this urge has been satisfied by our need to work most of our waking hours. But now, suddenly, mankind has found itself with two, three, and often even ten times as much free time his parents had. As a result, people today are bored. More bored than ever before. They have nothing to do, and their need for diversion is becoming horrendous.

Years ago, if you wanted to be entertained, or to escape, you went to a movie once a week. This took some planning, and a lot of time was consumed in getting there and back. It was almost like a holiday outing. Today we simply turn on the television set—and a government report recently stated that the average person in the United States watches television five and a half hours a day.

The leisure time problem we have today is nothing compared to what it's going to be. It's been estimated by some people who like to estimate things that, by 1980, there will be enough real work for only 10% of the population. Ah, what madnesses will spread through the land then?

What does one do who has no compulsive drive toward immersing himself in an all-consuming hobby? He doesn't need to work, and he doesn't know how to play. What he does is take drugs, join protest groups, or increase his sexual activity.

As the years go by our increase in sexual activity will take on enormous proportions, enough to cause a tremendous impact on our societal behavior structure. There will be much more infidelity among the married folk, and unusual and intense pre-marital sexual experimentation among single people will be as common as kissing on the first date used to be. (In fact, one of my friends now asks girls, "Do you believe in being tied up and whipped on the first date?").

In considering this increase in sexual activity and diversion, we must remember that man is a herd animal. He is not like a spider who lives alone, but like a bee surrounded by his own kind. He is like sheep and dogs and geese—he needs to be with his herd. There are very few hermits in the world, and those who do exist come down from their mountain cave every so often to announce to everyone that they're a hermit and don't need people, and then go back up to their cave feeling smug. All this being so, we can see why orgies are growing so rapidly in popularity—they satisfy normal sexual desires, they are diversionary, and they involve the herd.

Mass Media Is Destroying The World As We Know It

In the good old days a culture was divided into small geographic areas. The people, especially in small communities, were isolated by the lack of distant communication. Whatever the mores or culture patterns of a village, they were destined to remain static for perhaps hundreds of years, influenced only by an occasional traveling salesman or by a returning prodigal son.

With the invention of the telephone, people's weltanschaung widened, and with the radio it became national. Now, with the movies and television, all Americans are one people.

The geographic boundries have fallen so far that even regional dialects are disappearing. Before, the only voices you would hear were those of your parents and the other villagers. Now, everyone is beginning to talk like Walter Cronkite and all those sound-alike voice-over announcers for TV commercials.

Just as our way of talking is becoming homogenized, so is our morality. Fifty years ago people in Twin Falls, Bellville, or Augusta never even knew there were such things as homosexuals. In fact, those who existed were often held up as examples to children as paragons of good behavior. (What a nice sweet man Mr. Hyacinth is, and such a good son. Why, even though he's 31, he still lives with his mother.) Discussions of sex were so taboo that occasionally there were marriages which were never consumated, simply because neither the husband nor the wife knew what they were supposed to do, or even that they were supposed to do anything!

Ah, but what's happened to us now? Years ago a woman would never even dream of kissing another woman not her aunt. But now here's Sandy Dennis, the sweet innocent wife in "Who's Afraid of Virginia Wolfe?" and the lovable teacher in "Up The Down Staircase" actually open-mouth kissing Anne Haywood in The Fox! And who was that funny lady kissing good old Suzanna York's nipples in Sister George? What's going on around here? Is art, in the form of movies, imitating nature? Yes, but even more, nature is imitating art. There has been nothing more trend-setting, more culturally innovative, that motion pictures—in our dress, our slang, our heroes and idols—and now in our sexual lives.

Commercials use the testimonials of celebrities because businessmen know that if one of our heroes likes their coffee, why then, it must be good. So, if Sandy Dennis like's Anne Haywood's breasts, why then, let's give it a try.

Yes, not only does mass media change our lives, but it changes it right now! Before, it took a long time for new ideas and new life patterns to become established, because the information flowed slowly and sporadically, and was unevenly distributed. Now it happens all at once, and to everyone, through television.

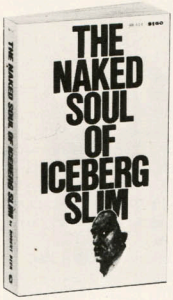
The effect all this instant and widely disseminated information has on the public is good—it advances mankind very rapidly—but it often leaves some of us confused. It's difficult to know what to believe in anymore. As soon as we get some philosophy firmly in mind, a whole bunch of people tell us it's all wrong. Only two or three years ago the vast majority of people believed that marijuana would make you insane, college professors were Commie dupes, cyclamates were good for you, the Viet Nam war was a good war and we should stay there until we'd won it, China was evil and would be our enemy forever, and so on.

But the thing which seems to be changing the fastest is our sexual morality. Do you remember Pillow Talk? The whole movie was about Rock Hudson trying to seduce Doris Day, and you didn't even get to see her shoulders. Did you think you would ever watch famous movie stars making love on the screen? Well, look how close we came with Rock in Pretty Maids All In A Row. And we did see it, almost, with Karen Black in Drive, He Said.

Only yesterday Dorothy Lamour in a sarong had men wacking-off in their hats. Today, if the star isn't hanging naked from a trapeze and being ravaged by a German Shepherd dog, forget it.

Thus, there is no question that the popularity of orgies has grown because of instant and mass communication. Not only do we have the information that they exist now, but because of frequent mention, we come to believe that such behavior is acceptable. Of course, it's also possible that we're driven toward attending orgies in order to get away from all that boring mass media.

Thus, technology, with all its ramifications, is the direct cause of the present popularity of orgies. And just as the direction technology is taking will not be reversed, the popularity of orgies will continue to increase. ●



THE NAKED SOUL OF ICEBERG SLIM

Don't cry for his soul because he is Black. Though Black is pain. Black is death. Black is despair. Black is the ghetto where he was born. And lived. As a pimp. Dope addict. Brutalizer. Of Women. Of other Blacks. For he cured himself of the ghetto rot. To write. As no man ever has. About his people and his life. His name is Robert Beck. Better known by his ghetto name, "Iceberg Slim." His first three books brought him fame. "Pimp: The Story of My Life," "Trick Baby: The Story of a White Negro," and "Mama Black Widow," a tragic, bitter family portrait. They were honest books. Sensitive, brilliantly written portraits of ghetto life and ghetto people he knew. Yet, his new book, "The Naked Soul of Iceberg Slim," is his most disturbing. Because it has hope. Because it is now. Because he searches his artist's soul in a collection of personal essays that are full of passion and razor-sharp perception. And when his soul is naked, you see the hurt of a man who feels too much and cares too much. "The Naked Soul of Iceberg Slim" is a great book. Read it.

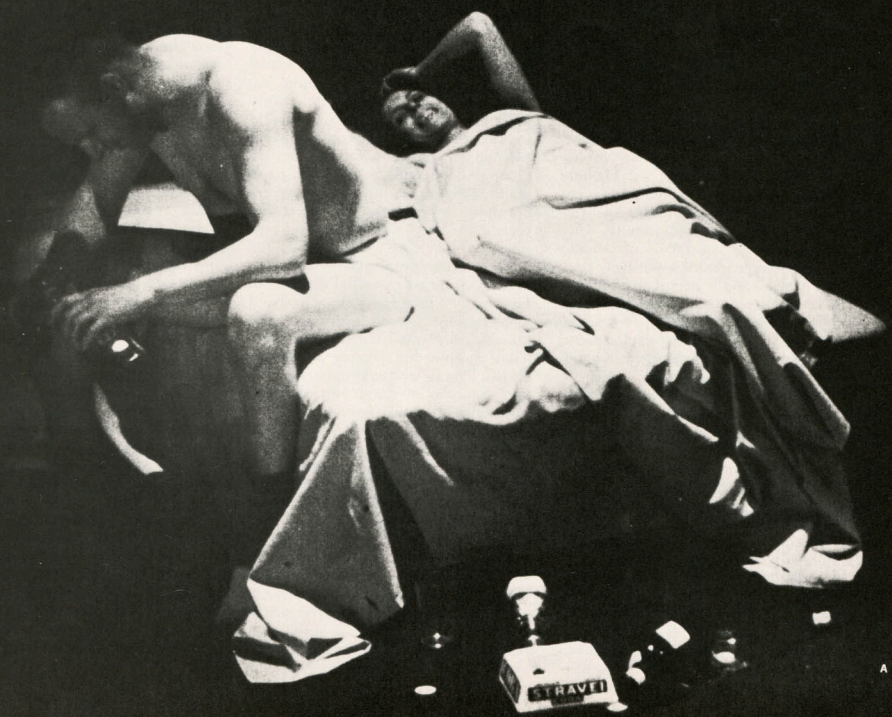
jealousy... the injured lover's hell!

ITEM: Not long ago Harold Thomas followed his wife to a motel on the outskirts of San Diego. He waited for nearly a half-hour after she had entered the room, then he calmly removed a double-barrelled shotgun from the trunk of his car, walked up to the door, kicked it open and shot his wife and her lover as they held each other in fear and surprise. The couple were already dead but he reloaded the shotgun three times and blasted them to a bloody pulp before police arrived.



ITEM: On December 19, 1967, Mrs. April Conrad, upon returning home from a Christmas party with her husband, removed a .45 caliber revolver from the bottom drawer of the bedroom dresser and shot her husband to death as he stood naked under the shower. She then left the house and drove approximately one mile through the sleeping Philadelphia suburb until she arrived at the home of Mrs. Judith Powlowski, a divorcee who had herself only recently arrived home from the same party. When Mrs. Powlowski opened the door in response to Mrs. Conrad's ringing, she was greeted with a bullet in the forehead.

ITEM: On June 3, 1969, twenty year old Sandra Lee Bouchet was admitted to New York's Doctor's Hospital after consuming an unspecified number of sleeping tablets obtained from her mother's medicine cabinet. Despite efforts on the part of doctors to save Miss Bouchet, she died less than an hour later.

ITEM: On November 12, 1969, twenty-four year old Gary Wayne Lassiter pushed the gas pedal of his car to the floor and ran down his twenty-one year old homosexual lover as he stood in the driveway of their Los Angeles home.

ITEM: On July 26, 1970, thirty-six year old Michael Del Sanzo strangled to death his twenty-nine year old wife Elaine and then held a gun to his own temple and pulled the trigger.

Each of the above acts was committed in the name of jealousy, one of the most distructive forces within the human psyche. Though jealousy may take various forms, certainly the most common form involves sexual infidelity or promiscuity. Unfortunately, the vocabulary of infidelity has become almost exclusively sexual. A wife might complain that her husband often appears more interested in his work than in her, and while she may find sympathetic ears, society will not generally consider this a good reason for drastic action.

But the concrete accusation of sexual infidelity is a world shaker. As a matter of image, unfaithfulness and infidelity have come to mean "sexual" almost exclusively. Psychologists, however, recognize that other acts of unfaithfulness among human beings eclipse the sexual by far.

Sharing a mate with others or other interests is most often the chief source of feelings of infidelity and pathological jealousy. Man, like so many lesser forms of life, has shown a distinct inability to share, and this inability may even extend to the children within a marriage. Often, an intense feeling of infidelity results when a husband feels his wife's exhuberant preoccupation with a new child. Yet the husband-father would suffer a deep loss of his self-respect if such thoughts were even entertained, much less verbalized. Therefore, the husband's jealousy is usually displaced to other more tolerable areas, generally a sexual one, since society has deemed it respectable for an adult to resent the intrusion of another sexual partner.

Sexual infidelity does, of course, exist; certainly it is the cause of many marital breakups. But experts have claimed that the extramarital affair is usually the result of unsatisfied emotional and intellectual needs as much as sexual ones. In a survey taken of prostitutes, it was found that their main business problem is the man who wants to stay and talk. And Dr. Robert Seidenberg, a noted New York psychiatrist, tells of one of his patients who carried on an affair that was the scandal of the small town in which he lived. The woman with whom he was involved was intensely intellectual, and in return for the mental stimulation she provided, he provided an expensive apartment, an automobile, furs and other items which generally go hand in hand with the conventional affair. His infidelity to his wife was a verbal one; he chose to talk to another woman.

When the man's wife learned of her husband's activities, she immediately resolved to become a better sexual partner. She, like most people, assumed that a man turns away because of sexual dissatisfaction. She refused to believe him when he confessed that his infidelity had not been sexual. Quite understandably, she could more readily accept the idea of sexual ineptitude on her part than the reality that he couldn't talk with her as a person.

Most extramarital affairs, however, are not confined to verbal contact. In fact, many a straying wife or husband may have little desire to become emotionally or intellectually involved. Their motives for straying are purely sexual. The following couples are only two examples of purely sexual transgressions and their consequences:

Jack and Diana were married soon after both had graduated from a prestigious Eastern college. Though they had dated steadily for over a year before their marriage, they had limited their sexual contact to heavy petting and, in only a few instances, mutual masturbation. At the time of their marriage, Diana was still a virgin and Jack had enjoyed sexual intercourse three times – once in a house of prostitution, twice in furtive encounters with young women whom he no longer remembered.

While both Jack and Diana are highly intelligent, they found it increasingly difficult to communicate after they entered into their marital relationship. Jack commuted daily to his New York advertising firm and Diana settled into the comfortable routine of the upper-middle-class suburban housewife.

After a year and a half of marriage, when Jack returned home in the evenings with what seemed to be the same old stories of his daily activities, Diana discovered that she cared little. She could not drum up interest in the stories which she found increasingly dull. She became bored – not with her husband, but with her life. Though she relished the sexual activity they shared, she soon felt that even that side of their relationship had become sterile and uninteresting. Moreover, Jack was often "too bushed" or too preoccupied with his job, and their sexual activity dropped off. Thus, he was depriving his wife of the only means of communication that she felt was possible anymore.

When a friend suggested to Diana that she should take up tennis at the local country club, she decided it was a good idea. Anything, she felt, which might provide a distraction to the boredom which had crept into her life would be a welcomed friend.

It was at the club that Diana drifted into her extramarital affair with her tennis instructor. A tall, blond, well-built young man who was popular with all the women at the club, he had spent a great deal of time entertaining many of his students in his nearby apartment. The first time his hands closed over hers as she held her racquet, Diana looked up into his blue eyes and knew that she had found more than one distraction on the tennis court.

The affair between Diana and her tennis coach was of no serious emotional consequence. She did find him particularly interesting intellectually; in fact, his stupidity often irritated her. She went to his apartment every other afternoon for an hour of love-making, then showered, dressed and made it to the station on time to pick up Jack on his return from the city. This activity went on for nearly a year before Jack was informed of the situation by the husband of one of Diana's country club friends.

As is the case with most husbands upon learning of their wive's infidelity, Jack's anger was directed almost solely toward Diana's lover. Although he found his wife's behavior unexplainable and unreasonable, he held the other man almost totally responsible. When actual physical violence was threatened, Diana appealed to her husband's sense of reason and asked that he recognize her share of the responsibility for the affair. For the first time in their marriage, she made her feelings clear to Jack. She told him of her alienation from his world and how she had come to depend upon their physical contact as their only means of communication and how, when deprived of this, she sought physical communication with another man.

While their marriage was on somewhat shakey grounds for some time, Jack and Diana managed to resolve their problems and found a highly satisfactory life together.

Steve and Barbara's marriage seemed doomed from the very start. Throughout his life, Steve had played the role of an active bisexual, moving freely in and out of affairs with both men and women. While most of his emotional involvements had been with females, he found sex with another male a pleasant and satisfying experience at times. In his affairs with both men and women, he found that women provided him with a more complete and fulfilling experience while he found it quite difficult to communicate emotionally with another male.

Both being members of a theatrical-type crowd, Barbara and Steve met at a party. At the time, Barbara knew nothing of Steve's occasional lapse into homosexual activity, nor did she suspect anything. His rugged good looks were contrary to everything she'd been led to believe about the homosexual male. After a few months of steady dating, they became emotionally and physically involved. Steve felt that is was necessary to inform Barbara of the situation.

Being a sophisticated girl, Barbara was remarkably understanding. Having been involved in show business for a time, she had developed quite a liberal attitude and had associated with persons of all sexual orientations, although mostly on a professional level. After learning of Steve's bisexuality and discussing it with him, she began to accompany him to a few homosexual bars and, subsequently met many of his homosexual friends, including a few ex-lovers. Steve, however, never flaunted his deviation before Barbara; when they were together in one of the bars, it was purely on a social basis and Steve was always very careful to hold himself in check when Barbara was close by.

As their emotional involvement grew, thoughts of marriage began to permeate Steve's mind. He deeply desired a home and family and felt that he was in love with Barbara, yet he seriously doubted that he would cease desiring other men as sexual partners. When he and Barbara discussed the situation, Barbara very intelligently explained that she felt that she could cope with the problem. In fact, she had given the matter much thought and felt that in a marital situation, she could more readily accept the idea of another man being involved with Steve than another woman. Knowing of Steve's inability to communicate mentally with another male, she did not consider his homosexual relationships to be very threatening, whereas a possible involvement with another woman would indeed create need for concern.

For nearly three months after their marriage, Steve managed to suppress his desire for homosexual contact. His relationship with Barbara was satisfying in every way. He felt no desire for additional contact, neither male nor female.

When it finally did happen, it happened with a bang. Strangely enough, Steve's first homosexual experience after his marriage proved to be the most satisfactory of all —-and the only one which led to some sort of involvement. The other man was a successful avant-garde painter who lived a carefree existence surrounded by numerous offbeat characters.

As might be expected, when she was confronted with the situation, Barbara did not cope as she had felt she would. She began to cling to Steve; her demands became incessant. She learned the address of Steve's artist friend and barged into his apartment late one evening as he and Steve lay before the fireplace. In despair, she attempted suicide and managed to bring Steve back into her hold – but only for a few months. Steve's frustration slowly turned to resentment and he found himself more and more attracted to the thought of extramarital involvement, both heterosexual and homosexual. He found that he hadn't wanted a home quite as much as he thought he had.

"Talk about a needle in a haystack!"

Steve and Barbara were divorced less than a year after they were married.

Jealousy, it has been said by many psychologists, is an expected effect of living. It would be remarkable indeed to find a person who would like to be fully trusted, fully taken for granted in every situation. If someone is relatively precious to us, it is natural to have a modicum of jealousy as basic cement, to guard our freedoms and prerogatives.

Playful jealousy is often a part of the titillation between partners. While each is certain of the other's devotion, they will nonetheless take turns in accusing the other of infidelity. However, it is only when they are quite certain of each other that they will indulge in such playfulness.

"What do you have to give the butcher to get such choice cuts of meat?" the husband may ask his wife with a sly grin. And later she might jokingly chide him with, "You're always tired these days You must have a sexy new secretary at work."

Such remarks are innocent to those who love well. But when one's relationship is even slightly precarious, those same remarks may suddenly take take on ominous new proportions and can no longer be considered a laughing matter.

Freud classified jealousy into three distinct categories: competitive or oedipal, projected and delusional.

Normal or competitive jealousy is thought of as being compounded of the grief of losing the loved object and the pain because of the personal wound. To lose out to another is remarkably similar to the oedipal situation where the child endures great humiliation and despair over having been outdone in the struggle with his father for the mother's love. In an adult situation, of course, such jealousy is seen primarily on a sexual level.

Tied to the above form is projected jealousy, derived from actual unfaithfulness in adult life, or even intense repressed thoughts of unfaithfulness on the part of one partner. The individual, while battling with his own unacceptable drives of infidelity, may salve his own conscience by self--righteously attributing the unfaithfulness to his mate.

The most destructive of Freud's three classes is delusional jealousy which is quite closely linked with paranoid psychosis. One must keep in mind that within our male-dominant society, it has been demanded that women practice inordinate faithfulness. Jealousy and possessiveness are as much products of societal demands as they are products of childhood.

In cases of extreme pathological jealousy, all of the teasing and playfulness which is characteristic of lesser forms of jealousy are not present. The individual is seriously preoccupied and distressed by the suspected infidelity of the mate. The idea often has the strength of a delusion, and no amount of reassurance will dispel it. The jealous person almost always rejects reassurance. Instead, he will seek substantiation of his fears, and if such substantiation cannot be found, he may even indulge himself in the phantasy that everyone is unfaithful to him, that they are lying to him and laughing at him behind his back.

Almost as severe a problem as the uninterested partner, according to clinical evidence, is the subtle form of "high" or exaggerated devotion. In this there is a devotion and obeisance that can be oppressive, stifling and enraging. One mate may become a puppy dog to the other, following, imitating, obeying with such obsequiousness as to drive the other mad. Yet, as maddening as such a relationship might be, it is quite difficult to register the complaint, "My mate loves me too much." Such behavior is often a grave insincerity which hides behind the mask of devotion, often an irrational possessiveness which bears no resemblance to love or devotion.

Dr. Seidenberg reports that such a situation caused one woman to seek psychiatric help. Her major complaint was that her husband spent most of his time following her around the house. He preferred to be with her every moment that he was home from work. His home was his castle; he seemed to have no needs outside of it. At social gatherings, her conversation and presence was always the most attractive and stimulating. He had even relinquished ties with his own family and seemed to prefer his in-laws.

When she signed up for a course in adult education, he immediately decided that such a course would be good for himself as well. When she undertook to play a musical instrument, he dusted off his violin. His political, religious and moral convictions were those voiced by her.

To outsiders, she appeared to be an overbearing wife and perhaps the promotion of such an idea was one of his underlying motives. She had, however, neither sought nor demanded this sort of authority in the home. As a modern woman, she cherished what she considered a reasonable degree of autonomy for herself but showed no particular interest in possessing the will of her mate.

Quite simply, this man was guarding his most cherished possession. By giving himself over to her, he was performing an act of adoration that should be reserved for a deity. He was projecting what he considered a great deal of unselfishness but what was in actuality a lack of self. A similar lack of ego makes other men and women jealously watch their mates. Their own sense of inadequacy persuades them that their mates would accept someone else's advances.

It is somewhat ironical that total devotion on the part of the woman is acceptable in our somewhat lopsided society. It seems perfectly normal for a woman to empty herself of all personal goals when she marries; her docility is often looked upon as a prime virtue. Yet, when a male indulges in such devotion, it becomes a clinical case.

Dr. Seidenberg felt his patient was confused because her husband was acting out the role that would ordinarily be expected of her. She was suspicious that perhaps her husband had taken this role upon himself to goad her into guilt feelings about the autonomy she had secured for herself. It is rare indeed to find a complaint that a wife is too docile, too submissive, too much at home. Society has clearly laid out the role each of us is to play in life.

This brings us to what has to be the most curious and unfair situation that American society has placed upon itself—the double standard. It has become relatively easy to see that in our male dominated society, infidelity on the part of the male is often excused, but for the woman it has several consequences. This unfortunate fact has been cleverly rationalized by the fiction that the male of the species is generally polygamous and his transgressions are a part of his nature. The woman, on the other hand, is guilty of a serious moral fault when she dares enter into an extramarital affair. She becomes cheap — a slut or a pig.

The rules of conduct are much more stringent and harsh for the woman. Perhaps the banner-waving women's liberationists will change this and project womanhood into a more secure and assertive position. For it is obvious that the issue of fidelity cannot be separated from the issue of power.

But infidelity on the part of either partner within a marriage is still looked upon with marked disapproval, and jealously will remain a basic part of us even if fidelity becomes an old-fashioned idea. ●

swinging etiquette

the right way to write

SINCE the world of the swinger centers about contact with new people, it follows quite naturally that the swinger must have a best-foot forward at all times. He or she must be good company, in or out of bed. Some (or perhaps all) of those old rules that seem so dated and bothersome actually apply to us, too, and there is really no excuse for swingers to assume they are exempt from the cordiality and mannerliness one expects from the world at large.

Anyone who would make a good impression must learn to function in any number of situations. If anything, swinging calls for greater—not lesser—finesse than other social function; it is purest folly to assume that an automatic sexual intimacy presupposes an automatic entree to the other privacies of life. In brief, it is mandatory that successful swingers treat their hosts (or guests) with care and thoughtfulness.

We mention this single gripe because it is so common: We cannot begin to count the number of occasions when we were surprised at someone's brazenness or lack of common courtesy, or when we were made to feel as if we were being regarded as "utensils," rather than people. Sadly, such occurrences are not rare these days, nor do they happen only in certain circles. It is probably fair to say that "forwardness" and lack of consideration are on the increase—and that swinging relationships, therefore, are generally of a shorter duration than they have been in the past.

Now that we have mentioned a chief gripe, allow us to fit it to our subject—the personal ad.

How often have you read an ad in a swinging publication which indicated the advertiser was concerned about the attitudes or graces of the other couple? Not often, to be sure. Such information is just too far down on the list of priorities when one is culling and measuring to make the lines fit—and still not spend a fortune. And, on the more practical side, it just doesn't seem necessary. Swingers we knew a decade ago were quite a different bunch; an altogether more considerate bunch.

Actually, we are not proposing that swingers spell out every little nuance of their personality makeup when composing a simple ad intended to produce general results. But this point is important; the ad should be gauged to foresee both promise and difficulty. If the area of difficulty mentioned has been an abrasion in your swinging life, then perhaps you should spend that extra buck or two and give it to them straight. On the other hand, if you haven't noticed anything uncomfortable, feel free to invest the saved loot in a bottle of wine—and consider yourselves lucky.

Swingers have been around for quite a while, despite rumors to the contrary. And since the first swingers came to our attention we have been hearing the argument that swingers are creatures of the flesh alone, and that they don't even tick. We disagree, believing that although swingers are unique within the establishment, it is also true the swinger must do many of the same social things others do in order to succeed and prevail. They must, first of all, sell themselves as people. To advertise the pure sexual object is self-defeating and eventually futile. Further, this seems a very difficult lesson for many to learn. Of course, some never learn. One wonders if there might not even be a new movement afoot. Something on the order of "swinging one-nighters."

OF the many ways swingers meet one another, only one—the advertisement—requires development of an expertise, or "touch." Advertising is a highly specialized form of buying and selling, and some people spend their lives learning how to compose enticing messages that will sell cars, aspirin, or what have you. This commercialized packaging, no matter how crass it may sound, does extend to swinging, for the simple reason that certain expressions convey a "tighter" or "sounder" meaning than others. As a matter of fact, the power of the written word is nowhere more in evidence than in the swinging ad, and based on comments and reactions one encounters it seems safe to say that swingers are a very selective bunch. Much more than the average commercial "buyer."

Generally, one can assume that swingers are open seekers. There are perhaps scattered swingers who associate with a chosen few and will consider no new partners, but these are certainly rare. As a rule, swingers tend to gregariousness and are on the lookout for "good things." They do not limit their horizons. It is not unusual for them to go to several parties in one evening, even though their sexual appetites may no longer be clamoring for satisfaction. From this it can be generally assumed that swingers have an enthusiasm for enlarging their contacts, which in turn probably accounts for the meteoric rise in swinging ads.

So, it becomes apparent that those who would expose themselves to swinging circles would do well to concentrate on how to write a good ad. Many new swingers pick up a bunch of cliché phrases and are content with these simply because they noticed that somebody else used them, and they are copying as an easy solution. The ads therefore do not attract; they neglect to squeeze value from their words; they express no personality. The ads are filled with boring repetitions of "all with photo answered first," "photo and phone a must," "discretion assured and expected," "can travel and also entertain," "ready and anxious, I'm waiting," and peppered with bolsters to ego-esteem such as "gorgeous, handsome, stacked, well endowed, doll, stud," etc. One might ask what purpose is served declaring oneself to be "discreet?" We have yet to meet a genuinely indiscreet swinging couple, but the ones who have come the closest have been those who advertised "discretion." Again, reverting to our initial theme, there is some likelihood that today's preponderance of disappointing first-meetings might be related to today's tendency to bear heavily on physical description.

Swingers have distinct leanings—and distinct limits of acceptability within those leanings. It is a good idea to announce one's age if above, say, thirty-five. We believe it is also a good idea to state anything physically uncommon, such as obesity. Beyond this, the ad should concentrate on likes, dislikes, sexual tastes, etc.

Ideally, it would be best to say that swinging ads should be written in such a way that they convey the same kinds of information the advertiser would like to read in another's ad. For example, we all know that some people lean to quirkie things—they learn the particular language of that particular quirk and their ads come across to us squares as just so much alien argot. Well, the same thing can be done with the more delicate nuances of sexual tastes and personality. Instead of saying "oversexed," how about "energetic"; instead of "handsome," how about "presentable"; in short, how about anything that smacks of inventiveness and careful thinking?

Lamentably, all ads have in common that essential information be given first; details come second. The essentials naturally serve the ad-readers when they are first scanning for prospects, and thus should contain the basic informative elements. The secondary things provoke and stimulate interest, but it is always the primary things which serve as first indicators. In other words, if you lose them in the first line, it doesn't really matter if the rest of the ad is good or not.

Primary information should deal with your city or the major one nearest you, sex, age, and whatever other statistics seem needed. Secondary information covers things having to do with sexual leanings, personality, or perhaps one's circumstances. Of these, sexual leanings often requires a special alphabetical language (remember that S/M means Sadism/Masochism, B/D means Bondage/Discipline, and AC/DC is bisexual); personality, circumstances, etc., are usually best phrased in direct, easily understandable English. Surprisingly, there are quite a few swingers who are interested in the hobbies, habits, and outlooks of their proposed partners (used as relative personality indicators). These swingers are usually those who have learned the hard way that most swinging relationships are indeed multidimensional if they are to endure.

The nature of advertising requires that the writing be crisp, easy to read, reasonably complete, and exciting. And then, to complicate matters, it should be brief (don't require that the reader wade through a bushel of husks in search of a single kernel). If you are the type of person who enjoys reading about the dimensions and ages of others, put this information first (on the theory, again, that likes attract likes), only after your "Male," "Female," "Couple," etc., beginning. Next, a bit of description is in order, but try to be more original than "buxom," "shapely," or "well-built." There is one anomoly in swinging ads having to do with dimensions of the body, and perhaps it deserves mention here: ads specifying dimensions have a tendency to attract physical culture people, faddists, fetishists, and even some rather severe narcissists—which all the more bears out the theory that likes attract likes.

Next should be the special tastes of the advertiser. In this case, swingers don't usually have to be too specific, the reason being that most swingers like the same things, which things were implicit with the first word of the ad. There is one exception, however; it is bisexuality. Female bisexuality has long been accepted in swinging circles, but it seems that lately male bisexuality has become acceptable, also. Of course, there remain many who do not accept this sort of thing, and so it should be spelled out in the ad if it happens to be your bag. No mention of it would indicate absence.

In the earlier days of swinging, when most people still confused the term with swapping and did not realize these are two different worlds, it was assumed that swingers did but one thing, with one other couple, and probably just once with that other couple, and that the whole tawdry business involved desperately twisted people whose marriages, at best, were merely counterfeit. Some of this confusion carries over into today's culture, so that swingers often feel they have to go to great lengths to spell out what they mean in their advertisements. Many of them are rightly concerned, since not all the readers of the ads will understand that swinging encompasses more than sex. For this reason, some prefer to add a few of the "other" things they are looking for, such as intellectual pursuits, travel, personal tastes, etc. As regards travel, for example, some swingers will fly across the country to meet an exciting couple, some (few) hate to drive across town. It is not generally necessary to indicate one's community standing or occupation; indeed, many thoughtful and experienced swingers are reluctant to divulge very much until they are well into a relationship. Anyway, most swingers are well-educated and in the better professions, and other swingers know this, and so it becomes a superfluous selling point. For that matter, it seems that people who attempt to sell themselves in this manner actually have little else to sell.

The remainder of the swinger's ad is usually given over to address or contact data. Most periodicals (like this one) offer a forwarding service, which seems to work out for the best.

So then, having covered the basics, let's take a look at some sample ads, one good, one not so good. As you go over them, decide what you like and dislike about them, but try to avoid making your decision on the basis of sexual preference, but rather on the manner in which information is given and the way the ad "jells." The answer as to which is the better ad should be no mystery—if it is, we recommend rereading of the article.
